A MATTER OF JUSTICE

In the fall of the year the aged mother answered the door, and a black man stepped in. She was the last of her race to know the difference between friend and enemy. She had lived all her life in the South and had known nothing but the color of the skin. She was near her end and was unable to recognize the visitor. He gave her a card and asked her to come to the office. She did not know what to do, but she obeyed him. She was taken to the office and was told to sign a document. She signed it without reading it. She was then taken to a room where she was confined. She was taken to a hospital where she was operated on. She died in the hospital. She was buried in the cemetery. She was the last of her race to know the difference between friend and enemy.

FIGHTING A WILDCAT

THE BLACK WINGS

In the third story of an old warehouse on the corner of 12th and Main streets, there was a wildcat. It had been the subject of much curiosity among the people of the town. It was said to have been imported from a foreign country, but no one knew how or why. It was known to be a fierce animal and was feared by all who knew of its existence.

One night, a man was walking down the street when he heard a noise. He looked around and saw the wildcat. He was frightened and ran away. He told the story to his friends, who were also frightened. They all went to the warehouse and looked for the wildcat. They found it in a corner of the room, and it attacked them. They ran away and told the police. The police came and captured the wildcat. It was taken to the zoo, where it lived for many years. It died in 1923.
