EDITORIAL.

We have seen the desire expressed that McKinley may remain firm in his determination to refuse to run for a third time for the presidency. It makes little difference whether McKinley, or Hanna, succeeds to that office, but it would prove a sunbeam, on the highway of insecurity, to find one proposition upon which that "man of destiny," could make a grand stand.

The the individuality of man will be individuality of man will be a come forth, and not only that of a few individuals, but each will be placed upon a plain wherein he, or she, may rise to the highest pinnacle of success. This will come under true socialism, and the milenium will be a close second in the race.
