How Standard Oil Meets.

An interesting illustration of corporate methods is afforded by the recent experience of a stockholder in the Standard Oil company.

Armed with a proxy to represent shares owned by his wife, and in accordance with the regular printed invitation of the company to attend its annual meeting, he started from New York about nine o'clock in the morning for the office of the Standard Oil company, at Bayonne, N. J.

Taking the ferry to Jersey City, and a trolley line toward Bayonne, he was shunted off to a little, old-fashioned street car line, which finally landed him on the outskirts of the Standard Oil company's works, a mile from the office at which the meeting was held.

After making inquiries of watchmen at the various railroad crossings in the yards, he succeeded in threading his way through a labyrinth of tanks, pipes, cars and buildings until at about 11 o'clock in the morning he reached a commonplace brick building on the very edge of the bay.

He was told to climb two flights of stairs on the outside of the structure, and there hidden away in a loft, without a sign to indicate its location, the annual meeting of the great and powerful Standard Oil company was being held.

He says, in writing to Leslie's Weekly: "Entering the room where the meeting was to be held, I found a fine-looking, courteous middle-aged gentleman seated by the side of a large table, upon which were piled the proxies sent in by stockholders, authorizing Messrs. Rockefeller, Flagler and others to represent them at the meeting, and I asked if this was the meeting of the stockholders of the Standard Oil company.

He replied that it was, and I then discovered that I was the only stockholder from the outside who was present. I inquired if an annual report of the company had been presented. The reply was in the negative, the gentleman remarked that the stockholders apparently had not attended the meetings or cared particularly to see an annual report.

I ventured to suggest that it was the custom at annual meetings to present for the information of the stockholders something regarding the condition of the property, to which the stockholders, as partners in the concern, were obviously entitled.

"The gentleman at once became more serious, and asked my name and whom my proxy represented. He immediately stepped into an adjoining office for a confidential consultation with the clerks assembled there, and in a moment several of them hurried into the room where I was and made an inspection of what appeared to be the stock books. I was the subject of a good deal of scrutiny, and was apparently an object of decided interest.

After a time my credentials were accepted, and I ventured again to ask whether he was able to give me a statement bearing on the company's business for the year. Courteously as ever, he declined to say more than that he must refer me to Mr. Dodds, the solicitor of the company, at the New York office.

"I asked if it was not somewhat unusual to refer a stockholder in such a matter to the company's attorney, and he replied that he had nothing more to say, excepting that if I wanted information I must consult the attorney. I asked the gentleman if he was an officer of the company, and he said he was, and that he was a director. I asked if as a director he declined to impart information regarding the company's affairs to its stockholders. He again replied, somewhat frigidly, that he must refer me to Mr. Dodds. I asked the director to give me his name, and he unhesitatingly gave it as Mr. Barstow. I bade Mr. Barstow good day, and tramped a mile back to the street car, through the gases and stenches of the Standard Oil works, and returned to my office in New York. I have not been a believer in anti-trust legislation, but I am changing my mind."

W. C. T. U. COLUMN.

The next W. C. T. U. meeting takes place Tuesday, at 2:30 P. M., at the M. E. Church.

What Whiskey Makes of a Mother.

Can a mother forget her child? Yes, when she is addicted to the awful habit of strong drink. Poverty cannot make her forget. Suffering cannot, but strong drink can. The following true story is calculated to make the blood curdle:

A woman in Manchester, N. H., has six children. The oldest eleven years old, the youngest six weeks. In the police court she pleaded guilty to the charge of drunkenness, but asked the court to suspend sentence because of her helpless children, agreeing to leave the place and live with certain relatives in the country. When she was released, instead of going to her children, who were then suffering from hunger, she went back to the saloon and got drunk again. The oldest child went to the police station to look for her, which gave the officials the intimation that she had not returned to her family. The boy added that the children were without food, and crying from hunger. The officials took care of the children, while the mother was again taken into custody.

It is no new thing for a man to be come brutal and turn against his family, or neglect and starve them, but here is a case where the motherly instinct yields itself to the curse of strong drink. Rum can make a mother forget her child. Rum can do what the most vicious and profligate child itself cannot do. The child may be bad, may abuse the mother, and bring her head in unspeakable sorrow to the grave, but the mother will not forget or turn against her child.

Rum can do it. Rum can destroy the maternal passion. Rum can make her hopelessly indifferent to her offspring. Rum can destroy her motherly affection. O rum! great is thy power! Surely Satan has no agency so effective for destroying all that is good and true in human life.

—New Voice

Gilded Dens.

Rev. D. F. Fox, of Chicago, who has been in the present movement against vice, has been flooded with letters from some of the fallen women of this city. He mentions one that appealed to him especially. It runs like this, and the letter specifically mentioned three leading downtown restaurants:

"Let not your energies be all directed against the basement saloons and dives; strike higher; strike at the places of apparent respectability—the restaurants having private dining rooms. These are the places that feed the basement dives; these are the places where young girls are ruined nightly. Here it is that they take their first downward step, to end their careers of shame in the places of low repute. It was in one of these private dining rooms where I met my downfall—taken there for dinner plied with wine until my brain was dummed, I came to myself to find my life a ruined one. And my story is that of hundreds.

"Compel every restaurant in town to tear down its partitions; to abolish its private rooms; these are feeders of the lower resorts. There is no hope for me but death. I know that, but for God's sake do something to keep other girls from following in my footsteps."—Epworth Herald.

Mrs. Fred Unrath.

"After my first baby was born I did not seem to regain my strength although the doctor gave me a tonic which he considered to be the best. I was getting weaker and weaker every day. My husband insisted that I take Wine of Cardui for a week and see what it would do for me. I did take the medicine and was very grateful to find my strength and health slowly returning. In two weeks I was out of bed and in a month I was able to take up my usual duties. I am very enthusiastic in its praise."

Wine of Cardui reinforces the organs of generation for the mother, and prevents miscarriage. No woman who takes Wine of Cardui need fear the coming of her child. If Mrs. Unrath had taken Wine of Cardui before her baby came she would not have been weakened as she was. Her rapid recovery should commend this great remedy to every expectant mother. Wine of Cardui regulates the menstrual flow.
