Sherwood, vice president, and three directors. Everything went along smoothly until it came to making a schedule for five teams, which was a hard thing to complete. In case of not being able to make a satisfactory schedule, it was agreed to take a vote and see which team should drop out of the league: When the votes were counted it was found that Myrtle Point was dropped from the list. The managers of the Bay teams are now very busy completing a schedule for a four team league viz: North Bend, Marshfield, Coquille City, and Bandon. On Major Kinney's Address. The Coast Mail in commenting on Major L. D. Kinney's address, at that place last Saturday evening, among other information on the subject gave out the following: The speaker stated that 179 miles of the road, out of Salt Lake, has been located. As to his own position, the Major said:—I am an employe of a set of men who represent a transcontinental railroad. They are the best set of railroad men in America for Coos Bay." He said emphatically: "You will have, within three years of the day I stand on this platform, a transcontinental railroad, if not two." Touching the coast line, he said: "The coast line may go through first." He said there was no connection between the two projects. The men behind the coast road, "are not our brothers, but are our friends." He said we need not worry about the Southern Pacific; "It will come in any way when it has to." The speaker said that Salt Lake City is enthusiastic on the subject of this road, and that the enterprising men of Salt Lake City would be heard from here before long; that Salt Lake would look on Coos Bay as "our seaport," and would help it to the utmost.

Struck Uncharted Rock. The steamer Ruth, A. Reed, master, north bound from San Francisco, struck a sunken rock, last Friday, afternoon off Lookout point just south of the mouth of the Coquille river. The vessel was steaming along at about a three mile rate at the time and came down on the rock three times in passing over it. She struck well forward, then near the center, and the third time came down very heavy near the stern. After striking the third time broken timbers floated up under the vessel. Captain Reed ran the Ruth into Coos bay, and on Sunday drove over here to see if he could locate the rock. Kepper Johnson and Captain Reed made a search for the rock and on Tuesday morning located it. Capt. Reed had done his best to locate it at the time he struck, making allowance for the distance he had made after striking, and when found, his location was nearly exact. After striking the steamer began to leak but the capacity of the pumps was sufficient to keep the water from gaining. He went into Coos bay intending to put sufficient lumber in the hold to float the vessel, and then make his way to San Francisco. The rock which caused the trouble was uncharted, but its existence was suspected although its position was not known. Some party had observed the sea breaking over it at one time, and on another occasion parties who went out fishing from here, had seen it, the water being still and very clear at the time. These reports had resulted in search being made and the government had sent a vessel here to locate it at one time, we learn, but without being able to find it. At night tide it is covered by about 20 feet of water. The steamer Ruth was drawing about 13 feet when she found the rock. Captain Reed returned to Coos bay Tuesday much relieved by having made the discovery.
