Jack Murphy Drowned.

Yesterday afternoon about 3 o'clock the town was thrown into a gloom and sorrow over the sad news of the drowning of little Jack Murphy, age 10.

It happened in this manner: George Peters, Allen Nichols, Tom Minor, Harold Lee and Pat Flanagan were on the way towards Kittiwake and were playing along the water front when Allen Nichols, Jack Murphy, Harold Lee and George Peters made a run to get on some logs, three of the boys reaching the log at the same time, jumped aboard, young Peters was a little slower or would have got on the same log and fallen in also. The other boys immediately got poles to help out the drowning boy. Tom Minor reached Harold Lee with a pole and brought him on the log almost exhausted. Little Pat Flanagan rescued Allen Nichols, who had gone down several times while Jack Murphy laid flat on his back on the log, and he finally sank from exhaustion. Assistance was soon at hand and by the aid of pole poles the boy was found and the men who rescued him did all in their power to resuscitate the unfortunate lad. Dr. Horsfall was at once telephoned for and arrived in all haste but was unable to resuscitate the boy.—Coast Mail.

A Notable Snare or Tumor Brain.

Editor Recorder: While visiting the office of Dr. A. W. Kime a few days ago, accompanied by Comrade Lundy, of Myrtle Point, we noticed a major tumor drum occupying a place on the wall. As each of us have had experience with this kind of instrument in former days, our curiosity was aroused, and during the doctor's absence, we took the liberty to examine it, as we each consider ourselves somewhat of critics in this line.

When the doctor came in we asked where he had purchased it, but consider our surprise when he very modestly informed us that he had made it himself, and that it was constructed from Coos County grown woods.

The shell is constructed from a skittish plank, and the hoops from maple. With Dr. Kime's consent we gave the drum a thorough trial, and found it to be of very fine tone, and much better than many of the high-priced factory made drums of the East, which cost from $100 to $150 each. The instrument shows excellent workmanship, and has all the requisites of a first-class snare drum. It is light, yet strongly made, and gives out a fine, clear tone. The shell resembles bird's eye maple, and although not colored, it is finished with a fine shellac polish.

It was made by hand, without former experience or proper machinery, and was attended with great success, as drums are like violins, many are constructed, but few have merit, and were it ours, it would be sent to the St. Louis Exposition as a Coos County exhibit. We have no doubt but that it would receive a blue ribbon.

He also has a bookcase of his own construction, and from Myrtle, which is a fine piece of cabinet work. Besides this a music rack, several surgical and dental instruments and appliances of his own invention and construction further attest his skill in producing what he wishes when it cannot be readily secured otherwise. He is an excellent physician and surgeon, but the inventive field, we believe, has a bright mind when he adopted the medical profession. His drum can well feel proud in having in Mr. Kime a good physician and surgeon, and an inventive genius of more than ordinary talent.

May success and good luck attend his efforts. C. T. B.

Kills Sea Lions for Their Skins.

Coos County Men Tell of Strange Sport on Oregon Coast.

From Portland Telegram.

Hunting sealions for their hides has assumed quite important proportions on the coast of Coos County, according to J. M. Bingham, a citizen of Bandon, now in Portland.

"People who were raised over on the coast make a business of killing and skinning sealions," he said today, "and it is no trick at all for one man to kill and skin 30 of these sea lions in a day. We get five cents a pound for the green hides, which we ship to San Francisco, where they are tanned. The leather, however, is porous, and only fit for bolting. It is considered very good for that, though.

"Killing sea lions is fair sport, as well as profitable. The animals come up out of the sea on the rocky islands and are shot with rifles and then skinned. A certain portion of their carcasses is highly prized by Chinese, who, it is said, make medicine of them, as they do of snakes' heads and skunk oil, and so we save this part for shipment to San Francisco with the hides.

"The sea lions are not protected by law, so they can be killed with impunity at any time of year. There was talk some years ago of the Oregon Legislature placing a bounty of $3 apiece on the sea lion scalps, but the matter never came to a head, and so all we get for killing the fish animals is the price of the hides and the part the carcasses the Chinese doctors want.

"The sea lions is a glut for fish and herds of lions will head off a school of salmon from the mouth of the river for weeks at a time, while fishermen are waiting patiently for the appearance of the salmon inside the bar. The sea lion's capacity for devouring fish cannot be exaggerated, and even after their appetites are appeased, they will slaughter salmon just for fun.

"I have watched the sea lions off the mouth of Rogge River catching salmon and keeping them out of the stream day after day. A big sea lion will grab a Chinook salmon underneath the dorsal fin, and shake him like a terrier does a rat, when it is all up with the salmon, which is cast on the waves dead, while the slayer goes after another fish. We are thus doing the fishermen and the public a good turn every time we kill a sea lion, and by rights we ought to have a bounty for every one we slay."

Mr. Bingham is in the city with a view to shipping sea lion hides letter distance to San Francisco, as the freight by the steamer Alliance is more reasonable.
