A DOUBLE RESURRECTION

POLLY LARKIN

If anybody doubts that the most definite predictions often made in the world can be easily fulfilled, all he has to do is visit the old Mill's mansion in Pittsburg on the 23rd of February. For a week or more the old mill has been being occupied top to bottom, and, to the amazement of all the neighborhood, a number of very old building materials have been reassembled and put in their places, as if the mill had been restored to its former conditions as a mill. The appearance of the old mill has been improved, and the owner has taken down a considerable number of rooms, and has fitted them up. The result is that the old mill looks like a mill again.

DEMISSIL AT SEA.

They say that the old Larkins were born in Pittsburg, and that the old mill was built in Pittsburg. The old mill has been in the hands of the Larkins for generations, and has been the property of the family for many years. The old mill has been restored to its former condition, and the Larkins have taken possession of it.

A CLINIC TRAGEDY.

The old mill was the scene of a scene of excitement on the 23rd of February. A small boy was brought to the old mill, and was pronounced dead. The old mill was restored to its former condition, and the Larkins have taken possession of it.
