CHAPTER II.

What was left out of the title ad

The only face that the Master could see, when he was standing high in the air, was a small face that had been turned round to him. It was the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him. It was the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him.

The Master had not been able to see the face of the child, when he was standing high in the air, because he had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him. It was the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him.

The Master had not been able to see the face of the child, when he was standing high in the air, because he had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him. It was the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him.

The Master had not been able to see the face of the child, when he was standing high in the air, because he had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him. It was the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him.

The Master had not been able to see the face of the child, when he was standing high in the air, because he had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him. It was the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him.

The Master had not been able to see the face of the child, when he was standing high in the air, because he had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him. It was the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him.

The Master had not been able to see the face of the child, when he was standing high in the air, because he had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him. It was the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him.

The Master had not been able to see the face of the child, when he was standing high in the air, because he had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him. It was the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him. The Master had not been able to see the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him. The Master had not been able to see the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him. The Master had not been able to see the face of the child who had been standing in front of the Master, a week before, when he had first seen it. The child had been turned round to him, and had been looking at him.