Fred P. Davis, Dead.

News was received here Saturday evening stating that Fred P. Davis, of New Lake, had drowned in the mill pond near that place, while attempting to move logs in the pond.

It appears that from some cause the logs had floated to the head of the pond, and Fred and George Gieber undertook to float some back to where they wanted to take them into the mill. Fred undertook to raft two down, and getting upon one he shared it with the other and then undertook to jump from the one he was on to the other. It seems that he fell short and struck the end of the log that he wished to reach, one side, just below the breast showing signs of severe contact after the body had been recovered.

The blow seems to have rendered him unconscious and helpless. Gieber got hold of him, but as Fred could not help himself, Gieber was unable to get him out of the water and had to let him go and get help. The body was recovered in ten minutes for his was extinct. The supposition is that the blow upon his side was the cause of death although the young man could not swim.

The funeral took place on Monday, the remains being laid away in the Bandon Cemetery. Rev. A. H. Aberly officiating at the grave.

Prof. P. Davis was about 29 years of age, and leaves a wife and one child to mourn the loss of husband and parent, also his father and mother, and other members of the family to whom he was very dear.

Steamer Kilburn Strikes While Entering Coos Bay.

The steamer F. A. Kilburn had a narrow escape yesterday morning while attempting to cross in over the bar through a dense fog. She went too far to the southward and struck on the south spit at 2:25. Here she pounded until 5, when the tide carried her over and up onto Slag, or Guano rock, from which station she finally floated and ran into the bay near Charleston.

The residents of Empire were awakened at 4 o'clock by hearing her distress whistles, which were kept blowing at short intervals. Mrs. Captain Magee immediately telephoned to her husband, captain of the tug Columbia, which was lying at North Bend, and the tug started to the relief of the vessel.

In the meantime, the Life Saving crew had started for the bar and ran out alongside of the unfortunate steamer, but seeing that there was no immediate danger, they put back to Empire, on a lookout for the tug.

At 8 o'clock the Columbia reached the Kilburn, a line was passed to her and she was towed to North Bend, where she is lying at present. Her cargo, consisting of 450 tons of wheat, from Portland to San Francisco, will be discharged at North Bend and re-shipped on some other steamer. Fifty-two passengers were aboard, 31 for Enola and 21 for San Francisco. They have been transferred to the Breakwater which leaves here this morning.

The injuries to the vessel cannot be fully ascertained at this time, but it is supposed that she is badly crippled. Her stern post, steering gear, rudder and propeller were carried away, while her bottom was more or less stove in. While coming up the bay in tow of the tug she was making a foot and a half of water an hour with all the pumps working.

It is impossible to learn just how the Kilburn happened to run ashore. Captain Thompson claims the fog spun at Cape Arago was not blowing and he got in close before he knew where he was. From one of the passengers it is learned that when the steamer struck the passengers were all awakened and told to dress, and when they were told to put on the life preservers. The steamer was rolling and lurching, and pounding heavily, and the fog was very thick. There was no panic among the passengers. Members of the crew suggested the idea held by some of the passengers that the steamer was in the bay until the fog lifted sufficiently to show that it was the case. The electric lights continued to work after the steamer struck, which helped to preserve order, otherwise a panic might have ensued, as it is said that the oil lamps in the staterooms were not filled.

The Breakwater arrived off the bar about the same time as the Kilburn, but she dropped her anchor and lay out there all day yesterday. A foggy bar is a dangerous thing at any time, and especially at 2 in the morning.—Const Mail.

Later, the steamer Kilburn was placed on the beach at Empire and examined as to her injuries, and was taken off and brought up to North Bend. The damages were found to be less than was feared. The propeller is all right, and with repairs that can be made at North Bend, it is expected that the vessel will be made seaworthy. The stern post and rudder will be put in, and the Kilburn was landed at the shears for that purpose. Her leak is said not to be serious.

Are You Engaged?

Engaged people should remember, that, after marriage, many quarrels can be avoided, by keeping their digestions in good condition with Elee's Bitters. S. A. Brown, of Benningville, S. C., says: "For years my wife suffered intensely from dyspepsia, complicated with a torpid liver, until she lost her strength and vigor, and became a mere wreck of her former self. Then she tried Elee's Bitters, which helped her at once and finally made her entirely well. She is now strong and healthy." C. Y. Lowe, Druggist, sells and guarantees them at 50cts a bottle.
