HUMOR OF THE HOUR

By Special Delivery

George Ethelbert Walsh

The topic is a burning gripe over the barking of dogs and how to control it. "We're not sure if the barking is caused by the heat or the smell, but it's a problem," the author says. The article discusses various methods such as using dog repellant and training to control the behavior.

The story starts with an introduction to the problem and then goes on to describe the author's experience with a particular dog. The dog is described as being particularly noisy and causing trouble for the neighbors. The author then talks about the different methods he has tried to control the barking, including using a spray to deter the dog from barking. The spray seems to work initially, but the dog soon gets used to it and starts barking again. The author then describes a training method he tried, which involved teaching the dog commands and rewarding it for good behavior. This method seems to be working, but the author wonders if it will be a permanent solution.

The story concludes with the author expressing concern about the impact of the barking on his neighbors. He wonders if there is a way to control the barking without causing harm to the dog. The author ends by expressing hope that one of the methods he has tried will work and that the dog will stop barking soon.
