The Local Saloon Question.

The rumor is abroad in Bandon, and very well vouchered for, that an effort is on foot to establish another saloon in this town. The RECORDER is sorry that such a venture is contemplated, and it hopes to see it throttled before it bears the impress of ultimate success.

Bandon has four saloons now, and to the average mind this is sufficient. To the "probi" and extremist mind it is four too much. We would agree with our temperance friends if the county as a whole was "dry," but it is not so, and we had better have our saloons than to be enriching those of Marshfield and other near by towns.

The purpose of this article, however, is to object to the further spread of the liquor business in Bandon. Some may and do argue that the more saloons the more revenue for the city without any probable increase in the liquor consumed. We are not disposed to regard this a logical conclusion, and cite the decision of the leading cities to limit the number of saloons in the interest of better morals and lessened crime. The RECORDER is not willing for Main street, or the business heart of town to be converted into a continuous whisky row for the sake of a few paltry dollars, and we believe that the community's morals will be best subserved by restricting the number of resorts and exercising rigid supervision over the manner of their conduct.

It is conceded that Bandon has abundant means now for quenching every masculine thirst, and there is no logical reason why we should extend our arms to those who have been legislated from the business in neighboring towns. Especially is this true in view of the fact that our present saloon men are known to us, have all, with a single exception, lived here for years, and their good families and their pecuniary investments are here. Mr. Nelson, who arrived but recently and obtained a license to conduct a resort, brought the very best of references with him, and his excellent character and his purpose to run an orderly place are amply demonstrated. Those who would come may be good enough men, but we have all the drinking places we need.

In this article we are not taking the position that saloons are a necessary adjunct to any community, and we would heartily applaud if there were not a saloon in the land, but, as we permit them in the county we should permit them in the town, in a restricted and well governed manner. We are taking the position, simply, that the limits of this business have sufficiently broadened, and there is no quarter here for those who have been routed elsewhere, which opinion, we believe, reflects the sentiments of the greater part of the community.

The Board of Trustees, at a recent meeting, decided that the future liquor license in the town will be $600 instead of $400 per annum, which was a wise and proper proceeding, and it is to be hoped that the Board will now find it proper and legal to sit upon attempts to overrun the city with barrooms.

The defeat of Hearst for the Governorship of New York ought to discourage the political ambitions of that irrepressible journalist, but it is not likely it will. Hearst is made of a material that doesn't down in spirit, and it remains for him to be downed by the people's expression. We had small faith in his chances to gain the coveted chair at Albany during the later weeks of the bitter campaign, and are inclined to the belief that his success would have been serious for the business tranquility of the Empire State.

The editor has been personally acquainted for some years with James N. Gillett of Eureka, who has just been elevated to the Governorship by the people of the great State of California. Gillett was an honest woodsman when first we met him, and his rise has been steady and largely through his own individual exertions. He is not a brilliant man, but he has a winning personality and is a splendid campaigner. He has always allied himself with the conservative element in politics, and this, coupled with his attorneyship for a railroad corporation, earned for him the hostility of organized labor in the late campaign. But California is overwhelmingly Republican, and Gillett slid in despite the formidable opposition waged. Obscure Humboldt feels something of an honor in his elevation to so exalted a position.

That the RECORDER is a pretty good advertising medium is evidenced in a degree by a letter received Monday by the Bandon Real Estate Co. from a gentleman in Annandale, Canada. This gentleman—E. McFarlane by name—writes to learn about certain property offered by the company named through the columns of the RECORDER, and intimates his intention to journey from distant Canada to look at this section very soon. He is favorably impressed with Bandon, for he forwarded some money as part payment on building lots desired. Verily, it pays to advertise.

Cloudburst Destroys Mill.

The writer has twice visited the hamlet of Round Mountain, forty miles east of Redding, Shasta county, California, where existed an extensive sawmill, a store and a number of dwellings. The settlement is at the summit of a circular mountain, and commands a fine view of the northern Sacramento valley in clear weather. We observe by recent dispatches that the entire hamlet was swept away by a cloudburst, and nothing but wreckage and devastation remain. A telegram speaks thus of the terrible destruction:

A cloudburst at Round Mountain at 8 o'clock yesterday morning caused a flood of water that swept away the Terry Lumber Company's dam though the flood gates stood wide open. A wall of water forty feet high rolled down the canyon half a mile further, struck the sawmill, a building 200 feet long, 60 feet wide and 30 high, and swept the structure 200 yards farther down the canyon and piled it up in a heap. The machinery and mill destroyed entailed a loss of $10,000.

Five men were at work on repairs in the mill when the cloudburst came. They heard the roar of the water rolling down the canyon, and rushed from the building just in time to escape. The roof was swept away by the crest of the wave that struck the mill as they ran to higher ground. Two hundred feet of trestle were destroyed, and higher up the canyon trees were uprooted by the flood or snapped off at the butt.

The Terry Lumber Co. has a second sawmill in the same camp. It escaped all damage, as did $50,000 worth of lumber piled on higher soil in the yards between the mills.
