GEN. EATEMUP KUROKI, of the Japanese military department spent enough time in this country to learn that we burn enough powder in one day, long near the first of this month, to blow most any old nation off the face of the map.

A CONUNDRUM from the St. Louis Globe-Democrat is as follows and we beg to plead ignorance of the answer. "If two cents more of cotton and two cents more labor are put into a shirt, why is the price of the garment marked up twenty-five cents?"

THE SHIPYARD SITE this side of Cody's Mill is just the place for J. H. Price to rebuild, and it is up to our enterprising business men to see that it is secured for that purpose. When the Pulp and Paper Mill was started, everybody helped, and when Mr. Cody talked of putting in a Saw Mill here, a site was secured for him at once. Mr. Price has given work for several months past to close to seventy men. He does not ask for sympathy or for a site, but he has been furnishing a pay roll of about $5,000 per month, which has dropped off at once and is sure to be felt by the entire community. When he first built he neither asked for assistance or a building site, and ever since has given employment to a large number. The government works have opened up again, and there will be seventy men that are out for a job. They cannot obtain the wages given by Mr. Price, and the additional work will not offer any opportunities for new residents. If Mr. Price can be induced to rebuild, a site should be offered him. It is a small matter in the end and will at least show appreciation.

CLUTCHING HIS GOLD BAGS with his oil smeared fingers, John D. Rockefeller swears his personal property amounts to less than fifteen thousand dollars. The richest man in the world, with one of the finest homes, fitted with the finest of furniture, and who cannot possibly spend his money, much less count it, has to resort to deliberate falsehood in order to save a few paltry dollars that he could make back again, as he has done oft times before by raising the price of oil a cent all over the country. There are neither watches, money or jewelry of any sort in his magnificent home, Forest Hill, so he asserts. He will endow an institution with millions, a monument to practically advertise him, but will not even help to pay his share of the taxes, and such amounts that he cannot swear himself out of. He values his pianos at $300 and his eight elegant carriages, any of which would no doubt exceed the amount of the assessment, are valued by him at $1,800.

THE WHIPPING POST and barbarism seem to be closely related. We were a great many years in getting past the age in which capital punishment was in vogue altogether. The whipping post of Oregon has its many good advantages as well as the reverse, too. The wife beater holds a much higher respect for such punishment than, in many instances, the rock pile. But the whipping post can not, and will not suffice as a prevention for this crime. A case in Portland a short time ago shows a man that after he had been sent to the whipping post, his wife, who by the way was the main support of the house, took him back again and went back to the washtub to slave her life out for him, and now he is back before the authorities on a similar charge, and no doubt his wife will be just as ready to have him back, as before, notwithstanding her cruel treatment. One attempt of wife beating should suffice, and the wife, who is made independent by earning her own living, should not live with a man who amuses himself in such a manner.

"WHEN I WAS YOUNG," an elderly man who had worked all his life for what he had, was saying a short time ago, "I had to serve a year's apprenticeship before I was considered competent to receive enough wages to pay my board, and another year before I was paid enough to provide clothing and living. The boys of to-day expect a man's wages almost from the start; are seldom satisfied with a position long enough to master the first principles of the work, and their main idea seems to be just how much they can get out of doing." And he wondered why it was that had changed so much. The following little clipping from the Columbus State Journal might have a tendency to answer him:

A boy went into a shop to work for a man. He was a lad of considerable intelligence and knew it himself. Besides, he had large ideas of his personality, and had thought a great deal over what were his rights. He knew exactly what he was entitled to, and what the other fellow was entitled to, and between the two there was a deep, definite division. He observed this line very closely, and did not cross it for an instant. If engaged on a piece of work, and quitting time came, he quit right then, even if he could have finished it in three minutes. In doing so, he never thought for a moment of having talked with Bill Jones full twenty minutes, that very afternoon, about a baseball game that came off the day before. He was simply looking to his rights and no one else's.

This was his way. Of course he didn't stay long. There was no particular quarrel. He just "petered out." He hadn't comprehension enough of his duty or a sufficient regard for his service to put him in sympathy with his work. He was a misfit. He did as little as he could for his employer. He stood on his rights, and more too. That was some years ago. Now he is driving a team up in Cleveland for $1.50 a day.

When he left the shop another boy went in. He knew his rights but he didn't insist on them as much as he might, for he believed in doing things. If time was up and he could finish a thing with a few minutes' over work, he would do it every time. He made himself worth something. Pretty soon that employer saw that he couldn't get along without him. He kept advancing his wages, and then finally took him into partnership, and now the business is a great one, and that boy has a grand home, a big salary, and a lovely family, all because he was a boy of get-up, of gumption, and thought more of his duties than he did of his rights.

Port Orford Notes.

From the Tribune.

As far as heard from the lists of deaths caused by the Fourth of July celebrations throughout the United States amount to 37, while over 2,000 were wounded.

A young man supposed to be about 20 years of age and evidently insane, was in Port Orford last week and went on down the coast. He imagines that he has fights with the Japanese.

Bishop Scadding and wife, and Rev. Horsfall, arrived in Port Orford Friday evening and spent an enjoyable day on the beach, and in viewing out local scenery. The Bishop is a fine specimen of manhood in many ways, with pleasant social manners and a magnetic personality. He held services in the church Sunday morning and afternoon, and is an orator whom it is a rare treat to hear. The party left for Rogue river Monday morning and expected to be in Port Orford this evening on their return up the coast.

Port Orford experienced the quietest Fourth of July in its history. Our people had scattered to the three winds to attend the celebrations at Gold Beach, Bandon and Arago, until there were not enough of us left to make a decent hurrah! But for the patriotic display of flags and the irrepressible American boy with his firecrackers and instinctive desire to do something big on this the biggest of all our holidays—one would not otherwise have known that we were enjoying the celebration of the birthday of American liberty and of our Nation. It was a lovely day, the sun shone bright with prophetic promise, and it made us happy to know that all America was celebrating the day with no clouds above them.

There is much inquiry as to the date when Mr. Hume will hold the races at his Wedderburn track, and people are hoping that he will be able to make the announcement before long. If the Woodmen Rally could be fixed at the same date, it would assure a very large attendance, probably surpassing any yet held in this county.

On last Wednesday the little gasoline launch, which has been in course of construction for some time at Harbor, under the guidance of Rast Gardner, was successfully launched, but when Prof. C. Lauterback, the engineer, turned on the power, the machinery failed to work, something being wrong with the propeller. After some overhauling the engineer finally made the engine work, and a trial trip was made from the mouth of the river to Enos rock and back—a distance of 1 1/4 miles, and the time consumed was 10 minutes.
