

HOG ISLAND.

The Story of Its Name as Varietously Told in Nassau, N. P.

Directly across the harbor from the city of Nassau, N. P., there is an island called Hog Island. On the north side of that island toward the ocean there is a fine bathing beach, which is much used in the tourist season in the winter.

The fee for bathing is 25 cents and includes eating all the fruit that the bather may wish. The fruit is peeled and put on long sticks, which is considered the real way to have it. There is no limit.

Now, it happens that there is a story about a certain bather and that fruit privilege which is a favorite in Nassau. At least ten of every dozen men will try to tell you that story—that is, if you stay long enough. In a brief time like three hours you are likely to hear it at least three times.

Mr. Brown, who, with two other Browns, forms the pilot trust down in Nassau, told it first to a couple of Americans whom he was taking over to the steamer in boat No. 2.

"You see that place?" he asked, pointing with a bronze finger. "That's Hog Island. You can go over there and bathe and eat all the fruit you want for a quarter."

"The old fellow who runs the place has made a mint. One day a fellow came over and he ate about twenty oranges. By and by maybe his conscience bothered him, and he said:

"Say, old man, maybe I'm infringing."

"Oh, no," said the old chap, "you know the name of the island."

When the two Americans struggled up the rope ladder to the steamer's deck they met the purser, who was loafing about.

"I've been down here a lot," he said after awhile, "but I've never been in swimming off that island. They say it's great. And you can get all the fruit you want, too, thrown in with the price of the bath. All you can eat for a quarter."

"They tell a story about the place. One day a fellow went over there and ate about thirty oranges. By and by maybe his conscience bothered him, and he said to the old fellow who runs the place:

"Guess I'm eating too much, eh?"

"Oh, no," says the old chap. "Perhaps that's how the island got its name when one of you fellows came along."

On board the boat when it left Nassau was a 'conch,' which is the Nassau name for an inhabitant of the island of New Providence. He was telling about the place one night and suddenly turned to one of the Americans and said:

"Do you remember that island with the lighthouse and the wreck just at the harbor entrance? Well, that's Hog Island. It's a great bathing place."

"Go ahead. Tell us the story of the man who ate thirty oranges and then was told maybe that's how the island got its name," said the American.

"Oh, that isn't exactly it," said the conch, with a British persistence about details.

"Well, what is it?" asked the American.

"Why, this chap went over there and stayed all afternoon and ate more than forty oranges, probably forty-two, at least so I have heard, and when he was going to go he sighed and said to the proprietor:

"Well, I believe I've had my money's worth. But I don't believe you have."

"Oh, never mind," said the old fellow. "This is Hog Island."

"That isn't exactly what you heard, is it?" demanded the conch in conclusion.

"No, not exactly," admitted one of the Americans.

And, what's more, the story is in the guidebooks to Nassau.—Washington Post.

Paid For His Opinion.

On a tour in Canada Rudyard Kipling had a little disagreement with the landlord of the hotel at which he was staying, says London Tit-Bits. Just before leaving the hotel the famous author asked to see the proprietor, and upon that worthy appearing he was greeted thus: "I want to tell you that of all the hotels under the shining sun I have never seen one that for unmitigated, all round, unendurable discomfort could equal yours." When Kipling got his bill one item in it read, "To impudence, $3."

His Dream.

"There is some money, my love," said the husband. "I don't want any," replied the wife. "Come, now, darling, take this five pound note and go out shopping." "Thank you, dearest, but I really don't care to. I would rather stay at home and see to the housework." Then the husband swoke and found that he had been dreaming.—Liverpool Mercury.

REAL SEAMANSHIP.

A Thrilling Story of Maritime Adventure and Coolness.

Mr. Bankson was telling a story of maritime adventure. As he advanced in it, says a writer in the New York Sun, his fellow club members gathered around him and acquired delicious thrills. A storm was evidently about to break. He had told how banks of cloud appeared in the west and massed themselves there, and he went on:

"It was no time to be at sea. I knew that at high water there would be trouble.

"The light breeze failed. I had all sail set, but could not keep steady way. I simply drifted with the tide. The surface of the sea was like glass.

"A white fringe of clouds rapidly advanced and hid the dull leaden bank below them. I knew what that meant. I overhauled my ground tackle, keeping an eye all the time on the storm coming up against the direction in which the wind had blown before the calm fell.

"Suddenly a ripple appeared on the water beneath the cloud. The sails of the vessels up to windward dropped as if the halyards had been cut. Men scurried about the decks.

"A yellow ruffle appeared upon the water and advanced like an express train. Beyond it was a solid wall of rain, split by streaks of lightning, and there was peal after peal of thunder.

"I tried to head the craft so that she would take the gale head-on, but it was no use. The ripple on the water, following closely the yellow foam, was upon me.

"What was I to do? I could let sail go on the run, drop the anchor, pay out all my line and hang on. But what if the gale should be so stiff that she wouldn't lie to it? Then I would have to buoy my anchor and scud with bare poles until it blew itself out. While I went over this in my mind it came to the instant when something had to be done."

Bankson paused at this thrilling moment.

"Well," demanded a listener, "what did you do?"

"I got out," said Bankson. "Without another moment's hesitation I stepped overboard, took the canoe under my arm and walked ashore just in time to escape a wetting above the knees."

How Sunshine Warms Us.

The effect of the sun's rays is determined by two circumstances—the length of time during which they act continuously and their direction. When the sun is farthest from the earth, as is the case in summer, it is daily above the horizon for a much longer time than it is when nearest, as at the winter solstice. This continuous action intensifies the heat, and, the nights being short, but little of the heat is given off during the sun's absence.

In summer again the sun's rays reach us in a more vertical direction, and the days being longer than the nights, more heat is absorbed than radiated. In winter, the sun ascending to a less elevation, the rays reach us more obliquely, and the days being much shorter, the result is that more heat is radiated than absorbed.

Quiet, Applied by Proxy.

Bellingham was a long suffering man and a patient one. Never had he tried to interrupt the continuous flow of conversation which Mrs. Bellingham provided. At last, however, his nerves gave out, and the doctor was called in.

"He must have sleep and rest," was the doctor's verdict. He looked at Mrs. Bellingham thoughtfully. "Madam, I will send up some sleeping powders which must be used exactly as written on the box. Will you promise to do this, or must I order him to the hospital?"

"I promise," said Mrs. Bellingham readily enough, although wondering why he made so odd a request. She learned when the box came from the druggist's, and she read on the label:

"Sleeping powders, to be taken night and morning—by Mrs. B."

Diagnosed.

Young Featherhead soon after purchasing his elegant new touring car was taken with a swelling on the back of his neck. He went and consulted his physician about it.

"Doctor," he said, "are there such things as automobile diseases?"

"It is not unlikely," was the doctor's response. "At least automobile may develop tendencies to disease that lie dormant under ordinary conditions."

"Well, I wish you would look at that spot on the back of my neck and tell me if it might be either a carcinoma or an automobile."—Youth's Companion.
