Question of More Apple Trees

A suburbanite, who finds the price of fruit rather high, notwithstanding it seems to be too low writes the Oregonian to suggest a plan by which fruit could be made more plentiful and be placed within the reach of poor people not now able to afford as much as they should have. His idea is to have fruit trees planted in all the fence rows along the highways where now there are strips of brush land ten to twenty feet wide, producing nothing of value to anybody. His argument is since the land is waste it could as well be planted to fruit trees at little cost and in a few years those who are too poor to buy fruit could gather what they need along the public roads.

This is an idea that has been advanced many times and which has been practiced by some farmers, though not exactly with the idea of providing fruit for the poor. But ezperience shows that the plan is a mischievous one. Many a farmer has planted a row of fruit trees close to his fence, thinking thereby to get the fruit from an additional row of trees. But he has met disappoint ment. Trees planted close to the fence cannot be cultivated and trees that are not cultivateq will not produce fruit worth eating. Moreover, because the trees were in a fence row they are not properly pruned nor sprayed. It was not convenient to get to them with the pruning hook and was practically impossible to get around them with the spraying machine. So trees thus planted have become breeding places for all sorts of pests. They mar rather than enhance the beauty of the highway. No one wants to eat the small, sour and gnarly apples they bear. Instead of planting in the fence row, the up-to-date horticulturist leaves a space between the fence and the outside row of trees large enough to turn his team in cultivating the orchard. The difiiculty is to get fruit inspectors to chop down the trees which in years past have been planted in fence rows and which are now a menace to the fruit industry.—Oregonian.

A TRAVELING MAN'S EXPERIENCE

"I must tell you of my experience on an East bound O. R. & N. train fom Pendleton to Le Grande, Ore," writes Sam A. Garber, a well known traveling man. "I was in the smoking department with some other traveling men when one of them went out into the coach and came back and said, 'There is a woman sick unto death in the car.' I at once got up and went out, found her very ill with cramp colic, her hands and arms were drawn up so yon could not straighten them, and with a deathlike look on her face. Two or three ladies were working with her and giving her whiskey. I went to my suit case and got my bottle of Chamberlain's Colic Cholea and Diarrhoea Remedy—I never travel without it—ran to the water tank, put a doub'e dose of medicine in the glass. poured some water into it and stirred it with a pencil, then I had quite a time to get the ladies to get the ladies to let me give it to her, but I succeeded. I could at once see the effect and I worked wite her, rubbing her hands, and in twenty minutes I gave her another dose, By this time we were almost in Le Grande, where I was to leave the train. I gave the bottle to the husband to be used in case anothee dose should be needed, but by the time the train reached Le Grande she was alright, and I received the thanks of every passenger in the car." Inkhorn Terms.

Among other lessons this should first be learned—that we never affect any strange inkhorn terms, but to speak as is commonly received, neither seeking to be overfine nor yet living overcareless, using our speech as most men do and ordering our wits as the fewest have done. Some seek so far for outlandish English that they forget altogether their mothers' tongue. And I dare swear this—if some of their mothers were alive they were not able to tell what they say, and yet these fine English clerks will say that they speak in their mother tongue if a man should charge them with counterfeiting the king's English.—Wilson's "System of Rhetoric, 1553."
