DOCTORS' DILEMMAS.

The Question of Revealing the Employee's Condition.

Many dilemmas arise from the doctor's duty of keeping his patient's secrets. There was recently the much-discussed case of a doctor who discovered that a signalman on a railway was in such an unsound condition that he might have been the cause of an accident. What was the doctor's duty? Was it right for him to keep the patient's secret, or should he have disclosed the fact to the directors of the company? It seemed quite clear that the signalman could have brought an action for damages against the doctor, but it is very doubtful if any jury would have let the doctor suffer in the circumstances.

Lay, legal and medical opinion differed greatly in the matter. Of course it was the doctor's duty to use all his influence to get the man voluntarily to permit him to report his case. It was argued by some that if doctors conscientiously disclosed the condition of such cases it would create a feeling that they would not be treated. The argument would be a good one if the doctor would use the disclosure to further the case properly and to get the patient to release his condition. The moral of the whole case was that employees in important positions should be frequently examined by a doctor representing the company.

The less serious problem arises—ought a doctor to disclose the condition of an employee to an employer where there is no public danger involved? An employee, for instance, may be ill or incapacitated through drink. Here the doctor must be guided entirely by the patient's consent and should, even at the risk of offending the employer, keep his patient's secret. In England the law is indefinite on the point, and the unfortunate medical man may be held guilty of contempt of court if he refuses to answer questions in the witness box, or if he does so he may have an action for damages brought against him by the patient.

In 1896 the Royal College of Physicians took the opinion of eminent counsel—Sir Edward Clarke and Mr. Horace Avory—on the question of professional secrecy, and their view was that a doctor should not reveal facts which had come to his knowledge in the course of his professional duties even where there was suspicion of a criminal offense having been committed. Mr. Justice Hawkins (afterward Lord Brampton), however, held that in very serious cases, involving the screening of criminals, it was the duty of medical men to speak out.—London Mail.

REBELLION AND NEWMAN.

The author of the life of Millais tells the following anecdote: "When Cardinal Newman came to sit to the artist for his portrait, he asked where he was to sit."

"Oh, your eminence, wherever you like," answered the artist. "I will sit wherever you like," answered Newman. "I will sit wherever you like," answered the artist. "Come, jump up, you dear old boy."

—DEFIES ATTACK.

The Wonderful Strong Room Under the Bank of England.

There is a close analogy between the struggle of the locksmith against the burglar and the contest between armor plate and big guns. Time after time has the locksmith exhausted his ingenuity in devising apparently impenetrable chambers, and again and again have the marvelous skill and patience of the burglar foiled his efforts.

A hundred years ago the Bank of England kept its cash and securities in a great oak box clamped with iron. From this the strong room of today, constructed of armor plate, has been gradually evolved.

If a mob overcame the guards and "watch clerks" at the Bank of England, they could not possibly penetrate into the vaults, for their passage would be blocked by large reservoirs of water. The strong room here is one of the largest in the world. The foundation, sixty-six feet below street level, is a bed of concrete twenty feet thick.

Above this concrete is a lake seven feet deep, and above that thick plates of iron specially manufactured to resist both skill and force. Any one attempting an entrance from above would find a similar bed of concrete, a similar lake and similar plates of iron. The walls are impenetrable, while the doors are one foot thick, weigh four tons each and are made absolutely undrillable.

Many years ago, when the strong room was less rigorously protected, the directors were startled one morning by a letter from a man who said he had been in the vault.

Some days later a heavy chest, which had been abstracted from the "treasury," was returned to the bank by the writer of the letter, who had gained entrance from the sewers. He was rewarded and given a pension for life.

In the safe deposit, which has become a necessary adjunct of modern life, are to be found the most modern developments in strong room construction. One of the largest in London, which cost $1,000,000, consists of thirty-two great vaults, whose doors have no locks and are worked by hydraulic power.

When the doors are closed the mechanism is disconnected, and any one attempting to connect it would release 50,000 gallons of water and flood the place from floor to ceiling, although the strong rooms would remain absolutely dry. Many and varied are the valuables stored in these treasure houses.

At another London depository the writer was shown a room which contained $150,000,000 worth of securities. The next contained a collection of rare books worth $10,000 each, and another held a collection of old china. In a fourth were paintings worth $500,000, and a fifth contained tapestries which could not be duplicated for $250,000.—London Telegraph.
