

Rev. A. Hoberty's Address

The trend of our age is toward the practical and effective, and any change in the methods and courses of education should and will naturally follow this trend. Supt Ackerman says this trend is already quite marked in the Oregon school system. This is as it should be; while the improvement of the mind should by no means be neglected, yet there are many subjects such as domestic science, sewing and kindred subjects for the girls; and business principles, natural science and financial and agricultural subjects, that our boys should become acquainted with ere they enter into the larger sphere of activity, where they must face these problems, whether they are prepared to do so or not.

The young people are the hope of the future. But they can be womanly by holding before them the highest ideals. In the light of these they will thrill with hope; and feel that it is good to be alive and active in the affairs of the world.

And where shall they find these ideals? In the history of the past. Our youths should be made familiar with the thoughts and achievements of the past with its science and literature, with its amazing progress, with the battle against ignorance, disease and poverty. For the past is but yesterday and so it is that we may say that yesterday gave us our language and laws that yesterday built our palaces and cathedrals and temples, that yesterday erected the pyramids, the parthenon and the hanging gardens. That yesterday stored our galleries with paintings, our libraries with books, our factories with completed machinery and tools, that yesterday gave us this new world and giant republic. Yesterday peopled this continent with over one hundred millions of people and subdued the wild land of forest and plain so that today, from shore to shore waves the golden grain, and the forests and the myriad products of this land of promise fill every market and home with plenty and leave a surplus to send out across the sea to feed and sustain the peoples of less fortunate lands.

Yesterday also built our cities and towns, stretched the iron rail from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans and across and criss cross the entire country so that now we may travel in a few days from one end of the country to the other, whereas formerly as many months were required. Yesterday built our telephone and telegraph lines, and gave us our post office system, by which we can communicate both quickly and cheaply with one another no matter how far apart we may live.

And yesterday also built our schools and colleges and gave us our public school system. And it is only because of yesterday that we are permitted to gather here to dedicate this noble and beautiful school building today. Everything we have that is worth having comes to us from the past, although the future will doubtless bring us even immeasurably more than the past has brought us.

But the countries we call great are great because they have a noble history lying back of them. Just so a great person is one whose past years have been great. Here is a lesson especially for the young, who are prone to consider the future everything, the present and past as nothing at all.

Let the young in particular take note of this. If the past is blurred or missed by misdeeds it will make the future full of remorse. There is an ancient classic story that there was once a young man who went to Thebes to recover an inheritance that was due him. And because he was a fine young man and consequently beloved of the gods, one of these celestial beings went with the young man to be his guide on the way. This invisible friend went before making rough places straight and smooth, threw a bridge across a deep, chasm and in every way he could he made the young man's journey pleasant and easy.

THE AUDITORIUM AT A-Y-P. EXPOSITION, SEATTLE.

Probably the most striking structure on the grounds of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition is the Auditorium. It is builded of reinforced concrete, steel and brick and is a part of the rich legacy which is to be handed down to the State University when the Fair is over.

The Auditorium stands upon an eminence overlooking the main entrance to the Exposition Grounds. It is now in use as a lecture room by the University Law School and for all assemblies of students. It has a seating capacity of close to 3000, which can be greatly increased.

But the young man unfortunately lost the companionship of his friend. He became cruel and haughty. He hurled a stone at a lark singing its most melodious song and broke its wing. He hit his faithful dog with a stick across the back and left a bloody mark. Then his former friend became his enemy. He still went before the young man. But now he twisted the grass into strands so that the youth often tripped and suffered many heavy falls. He cast briars and sharp stones into the youth's path, so that his feet were bruised and lacerated. He sprinkled deceiving grass over the swampy bog, so that when the young man stepped on the supposed turf of solid grass, he sank through, and was soon struggling vainly to get out of the black mud.

Do you grasp the moral in this ancient fable? Had the Theban youth spent his yesterdays as he should have done his tomorrows would have been full of contentment and peace, instead of so full of pain and sorrow. No man can look smilingly into the future if he must always look back at all his yesterdays with tears.

I do not wish anyone to look back upon the past with morbid discontent, because of some mistake or some misdeed that your conscience cannot approve of. No man has a right to allow the errors of the past to slay his hopes and plans for tomorrow. It is only by way of encouraging and urging ourselves to spend the present moment and each moment as it comes, so that we shall not need to feel remorse because when we look back to it we know it has not been well spent that I speak as I do here.

For us all, yesterday holds many errors and lost opportunities, many mistaken plans and also many sins. But yesterday is irretrievable. It cannot be altered by tears and mournings and discomforts may not even by patience. The record is made and it is there to stay and to stare us in the face many times in the coming days. Yet yesterdays mistakes should send our aspirations and purposes all the higher for the future, and they should stimulate tomorrows endeavors.

Bryan Urges Taft to Act

Lincoln, Neb., July 20—W. J. Bryan has addressed a letter to President Taft asking him to allow the people to vote on the popular election of senators.

Mr. Bryan says: "To President Taft: Now that the states are going to vote on the ratification of the amendment specifically authorizing the income tax, why not give them a chance to vote on the amendment providing for the election of United States senators by popular vote? In your speech of acceptance, you said you personally are inclined to favor such a change in the Constitution. Would not this be an opportune time to present this subject to congress? Two constitutional amendments, one authorizing the income tax and the other providing for the popular election of senators would make your administration a memorable and important one and I pledge you whatever assistance I can render in securing the ratification of these amendments. With great respect, I am

Yours truly,
W. J. BRYAN."

Prosper Man Married

Word was received here today that Miss Lena McAdams, a well known and popular operator at the North Bend telephone exchange, and Henry M. Anderson had been quietly married at Coquille last Thursday. The news came as a complete surprise to the many friends of the young woman on the Bay who thought that she was merely spending a few weeks vacation with friends in the valley. A week ago yesterday she gave up her duties and announced that she was going on a vacation trip. Not an intimation did she give that Cupid had been busy on the wires and would require a new Central girl.

Mr. Anderson is employed at the Prosper Mill and the young couple will make their home there. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. McAdams of North Bend. Despite their chagrin over being so greatly surprised, the many friends of the young lady will unite in wishing the couple an overflowing measure of happiness. --- Times.

HELP FOR THOSE WHO HAVE STOMACH TROUBLE

After doctoring for about twelve years for a bad stomach trouble and spending nearly five hundred dollars for medicine and doctors' fees, I purchased my wife one box of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, which did her so much good that she continued to use them and they have done her more good than all of the medicine I bought before—SAMUEL BOYER, Folsom, Iowa. This medicine is for sale by C. Y. Lowe. Samples free.

Heinze's Books Found?

New York, July 13—Two trunks, said to contain the missing books of F. Augustus Heinze and of the United Copper Company, were turned over to the Federal authorities today. The trunks were found, it is said, in a house in West Fifty-ninth street. Apparently the trunks were first taken to a hotel at Spring Lake, N. J., then brought back to this city and shifted about until their discovery by a Secret Service agent today.

United States District Attorney Wise has been looking for the books for weeks in order to clear up Heinze's alleged illegal loans as president of the Mercantile National Bank during the financial stringency of 1907.
