Dolphin and Flying Fish.

A ship was lying at anchor at Boca Grande, says the Punta Gorda Herald, lately when the crew observed a dolphin chasing a flying fish, both coming directly toward the ship. On nearing the vessel the flier arose in the air and passed over the bow just after the foremast. As it did so the dolphin went under the ship and, coming up on the other side, sprang from the water and caught the flying fish on "the fly" just as it was curving gracefully down in its descent to the water.

DYSPEPSIA

"Having taken your wonderful 'Cascarets' for three months and being entirely cured of stomach catarrh and dyspepsia, I think a word of praise is due to 'Cascarets' for their wonderful composition. I have taken numerous other so-called remedies but without avail, and I find that Cascarets relieve more in a day than all the others I have taken would in a year."

Sleeping with Feet Raised.

Among the pernicious things that we have all been doing without knowing it is sleeping with a pillow under our heads. No longer if we value health and happiness may we bury our weary heads in these soft and soothing depths. It is the feet that want elevation, not the head, says a German doctor, and a pillow isn't big enough to raise them to the required height. The doctor has the foot end of his bed elevated about eight inches and says that in this position his circulation is better and that his brain and nerves have profited thereby.

"What was it about?" asked the editor of the Morning Thunderbolt.
"It was about woman suffrage."
"O, yes, I remember."
"You threw it in the waste basket, I presume."

"I presume I did."
"My object, sir, was to show that a good deal can be said on both sides."
"Well, you said it, all right, sir—on both sides of the sheet. That's the reason why you can't say it in the Thunderbolt. Good morning, sir."

SUICIDE OF SNAKES.

Serpents, Scorpions, Centipedes Immune to Their Own Venom.

The venoms of serpents, fishes, scorpions, centipedes, spiders, bees, etc., as well as the blood of the eel, owe their virulence to the presence of toxins similar to those which are secreted in bacteria. In both cases the toxins are specific products of the activity of living cells. They are very poisonous, non-crystallizable colloids, of unknown chemical constitution. The venom toxins are very sensitive to the action of heat and light, are easily destroyed by digestive ferments, and consequently are innocuous when swallowed. There is a great variety of these toxins, each of which exerts a specific action on the nervous system, the red or the white blood corpuscles, etc.

It is possible to produce in any animal an artificial condition of immunity to the effects of any animal venom. This is accomplished by the repeated injection of the venom in doses, each of which is too small to cause death. After a larger or smaller number of injections the animal acquires the power to resist the action of many times the quantity of venom that would suffice to cause death, if it were injected into the veins of a non-immunized animal. The blood of the immunized animal now contains a new substance, an antitoxin which has the property of neutralizing the toxin of the venom, and this blood (or rather its watery part, or serum) may be employed to combat the toxic action of the venom in a non-immunized animal.

The ichneumon, the hedgehog and some other animals which devour venomous serpents, exhibit an extraordinary resistance to the effect of their bites. This natural immunity is explained by the presence of antitoxins in the blood of these animals. Serpents are also little affected by their own venom. In general, it is almost impossible to kill a venomous animal by inoculating it with the venom of its own species, of which it can support very large doses with impunity.

These facts demonstrate the absurdity of the stories of rattlesnakes and scorpions committing suicide by means of their own venom. It is asserted that a scorpion or a rattlesnake imprisoned in a circle of red-hot coals will sting or bite itself to death. This is a physiological impossibility.—Cosmos.

THE ORIGINAL TRIPLANE.

Flying Machine Built by Stringfellow in 1868.

The Aeronautical Society of Great Britain announced an exhibition in 1888, and offered various prizes, which it was hoped, would create competition and result in the production of some practical results with flying machines. Stringfellow added to the idea of Wenham by placing three planes, one above the other. He also succeeded in producing a very light steam engine, and exhibited a model of the entire apparatus, experiments being made by running it along a wire, from which it occasionally lifted itself. This apparatus received a prize from the Aeronautical Society, and Stringfellow attempted to proceed with the further development of the apparatus, but failing health and eyesight prevented, and he did little more.—Cassier's Magazine.

Making Sure of the Architect.

Norman-Al-Oouar, an Arabian king who reigned long ago at Hiraq, commanded the architect Sennemar to build him a wondrous palace. This the architect did, and when it was done a single stone fastened the whole structure, and the colors of the walls changed frequently during the day. The king was greatly pleased and showered all kinds of rich gifts upon the builder with the lavishness of oriental kings. But monarchs were treacherous in those old days, and it occurred to the king that Sennemar might build a palace equal in beauty or even superior for some rival ruler. The more he thought over it the more jealous he became until one day he ordered the architect to be thrown from the top of the palace to make certain that no duplicate palace would be made. After this the king was satisfied that his palace was the only one, and the Arabians regarded it as one of the wonders of the world.

"OLD PETE" IS DEAD.

Honest Negro Paid Notes Securing Freedom 20 Years After War.

Peter Morton, or "Old Pete," a colored man and a quaint character of antebellum days, died at his home in Geneva court recently, the Cincinnati Enquirer says. He did not know his exact age, which was about 80 years, and there is probably no one now living who does. When asked about it he would say that he was "a right smart sized boy the year the stars fell and when Jenny Lind came down the Ohio River."

"Old Pete," since the close of the Civil War, has at different times been a family servant and man-of-all-work in many prominent families on the hills, and in Avondale, and varied his employment occasionally by doing porter work in downtown stores. It is related of him, and the story was confirmed by himself, that before the Civil War he was the property of a Kentucky gambler, who went broke, and "Pete" with all other chattels possessed by the gambler, had to be sold to satisfy his creditors.

The officers of a bank in Maysville, Ky., who had taken a liking to the colored man on account of his genial good nature and strict honesty, offered to buy his freedom for him if he would execute his personal note in their favor and make his payments upon it, according as he was able, until they were repaid. This he agreed to, but with the close of the Civil War and the scattering of his friends far and wide, Pete fell into hard lines from lack of a permanent home and steady employment, but he never forgot his financial obligations to his banker benefactors and he continued making his payments to them for twenty years after the close of the war until the debt was finally paid. Often he was told that the claim was outlawed and he could not be legally forced to pay it, but he invariably replied that his benefactors had trusted him and no matter how long it took he would pay them back to the last cent.

A Trying Time.

POSSIBLY YOU ARE NOT LAST.

Famous Physician Says Weariness Is Result of Physical Conditions.

Sir Lauder Brunton, the famous English physician, says that weariness is the result of physical conditions and the chronically tired are not at all ways lazy.

One constantly hears the complaint from patients," writes Sir Lauder "that they are 'always tired.' Other people term them simply lazy, but it is quite possible that in many of these cases there is some physical condition in the person which renders exertion specially distasteful to them, although other people cannot observe it."

Sir Lauder illustrates his point by a story of an eminent medical professor who, while acknowledged to possess brilliant abilities, was accused by his friends of being lazy. He died at an early age of heart disease, and his friends were then willing to admit that there was some excuse for his laziness.

In discussing the relation between mental and physical fatigue Sir Lauder Brunton makes the striking declaration that "it is a mistake to regard muscular fatigue as a stimulus to the brain, or mental fatigue as a stimulus to the muscles. Long-continued muscular exertion renders the brain anemic." This fact he illustrates by the following story:

"Many years ago I used to write for a medical periodical. On returning home one night after a very heavy day's work at the hospital and feeling completely exhausted I found a note from the editor, 'Please let me have an article on such-and-such a subject to-night.' I sat down with pen and paper, but not a word could I write. Then I lay back lazily and began to speculate as to the cause of my want of ideas. I thought: 'The brain is the same as it was yesterday, but yesterday I was not tired; perhaps it is the feebler circulation that prevents the brain from acting. If the blood does not go up to the brain, I may bring the brain down to the blood.' I, therefore, placed my head flat on the table, looking sideways at the paper, and began to write easily. On raising my head again every idea fled, so I placed my head again down on the table, and finished the article in that position."

"A similar instance was afforded by the practice of the late W. G. Lecky, the historian. He had a large magnificent head, mounted upon a long neck and a willowy body. He found out that his circulation was not sufficiently strong to raise the blood to his brain in sufficient quantity for its fundamental activity in the upright position. For this reason he wrote his history while kneeling on a sofa which had a large broad head. This served him for a writing table, and in this kneeling position he wrote all his works, the blood having thus to travel to his brain in a horizontal line, instead of upward against the force of gravity, as it would have had to do in the sitting position."

The secret of being tired apparently lies in the fact that the muscles when in work give off poisons which bring on fatigue. Worry and sorrow are also given as causes of weariness.
