Again Instinct or Reason.

My experience forms my opinion and this leads toward the decision of granting to the animals the power of reason and a way of expression to their kind

In the summer of 1870 I was prospecting in the Trout Water Mountains, Wyoming Territory, two miles north of Atlantic City, on the Rock Creek. The Bunky boys, the owners of the Bunky mines, had an "arastra" the Spanish name for a contrivance to reach gold bearing quartz. Opposite to this mine was a high towering cliff, the walls of which were perpendicular, and in places were overlapping. The cliff could be approached from one side only, and then with great difficulty.

Two bald eagles selected one of these shelves as a place to build a nest and rear a brood of young. Many times we watched their flight and their return, loaded with sticks and limbs.

Finally we noticed only one eagle flying about. After many weeks the two were busy carrying nourishment for the young ones. One day one of the men attempted to take an observation tour and see if he could discover the young brood; but with all his skill in climbing he could not reach the nest by twenty feet, but plainly saw two young eagles. None of the old eagles seemed to be close by, at least they were nowhere to be seen. From that day one eagle was missing; we believed that some one had shot the missing bird. A week or so later all at once he returned and each of the old birds grabbed a young one and emigrated to other parts, where the missing eagle had built a new home. By following the direction of their flight, and by watching the going and coming of the birds, the same man finally discovered the new nest, and in time secured both of the young ones, raising them in a large cage. They would not thrive, and one of them died soon, and then the other one was liberated.

How can we explain the action of those birds? Was it instinct or reason?

If only instinct, it is a deplorable fact that many human parents are lacking in this power to protect their children. POHL.

Doom of Newspapers.

The ingenious Mr. Wells has predicted a time when the day's news will be given to the world through the medium of gigantic mouthed megaphones. There will be no writing, no reading in those happy days. Books will have been abolished, the gentle art of typesetting as forgotten as is today the secret of archaic Tyrian dyes. Those who lived by the pen perished by the pen (better say by the publishers). And what, we ask our startled reader, would be the consequence if all the libraries, Carnegian and otherwise, all the printing presses, all the paper, ink and scribblers were suddenly to vanish?

Such a condition may be easier imagined than described. Say, for an example, that a universal beneficent tyrant succeeded in abolishing books for a century? wouldn't his monument in enduring marble and gold be erected by admiring and succeeding generations? Instead of piles of obituary notices, wouldn't his effigy in ivory and diamonds pass from hand to hand as a thing sacred? The world has for so many centuries been dominated by the superstition of the printed word that the silencing of ink for at least 100 years would bring forth nations composed of thinkers and warriors. Oculists could go out of business. Teaching in the open air, in the manner of ancient Athens, would again find popular favor. The orator would top the novelist, and the Bryans and Roosevelts of that far away epoch—reticent, taciturn temperaments—would cast aside the pen for the speaking trumpet. Fabjous days, indeed.—New York Sun.

TREASON TO YOUR TOWN.

Why Spending Your Money Elsewhere Might Be So Described.

In a recent address before the Western New York Newspaper Publishers' association E. F. Bussey, publisher of the Phelps (N. Y.) Citizen, said:

"The problem is really a serious one and has not received the attention it should have had. This in a large measure accounts for the expansion of the business to immense proportions. One concern in Chicago claims to have a business of $53,000,000 per year, with an estimated profit of 14 per cent, amounting to over $7,000,000.

"One village with a population of 5,000 is cited as an example of what the mail order business means locally. It is claimed that during the month of December last over $5,000 was sent in money orders from that village to one Chicago mail order house. A letter of inquiry brings forth the reply that there is no foundation for such a statement, although what is considered a large amount of business is actually sent to the mail order houses. The estimate given places it at about $10,000 annually.

"A somewhat recent development of mail order business is the trade in ladies' wearing apparel. A number of ladies patronize houses dealing in these goods without realizing that in permitting themselves to be ensnared by the exponent of the new fad, the psychology of advertising, they are laying themselves open to criticism quite as much as the man who is deluded into sending away his hard earned dollars for goods which show up beautifully in the catalogue, but have a decidedly different appearance when he receives them.

"The regular mail order houses at the present time have alluring advertisements in the magazines in which they offer apparently wonderful bargains in ladies' suits. The psychological feature of the advertisements seems to be the guarantee, which is given great prominence. Of course the reader is not expected to draw the deduction that in case the goods are not right the firm has a correspondent to deal with the case who is quite as expert in his line as the high salaried man who writes the ads. In the matter of ladies' suits it should not be a difficult matter to present a strong argument in favor of making a personal selection from a large stock in a store known to be reliable in preference to sending to a distant city and buying, as it were, a cat in a bag. The local houses unquestionably have the advantage of the best arguments, and these if properly presented are bound to prove effective."

TREES THAT ADORN STREETS

Care Should Be Given These Valuable Assets to Town Improvement.

All planting and care of trees that adorn and greatly help to beautify and improve the streets should be done by the town or by permanent organizations authorized to carry on the work. The poorer the soil the larger should be the hole for the tree. If convenient add rich soil. Spread the roots carefully. Fill in with pulverized soil and press into contact with the roots. Protect the tree with a line of wire netting supported on three or four posts. It adds to the expense, but pays in the long run.

When a tree shows signs of decay in places get busy at once and secure the services of a competent tree doctor. Have the wound dug out, scraped and a neat cement filling put in, thus prolonging the life of the tree.

But in the protection of the young trees don't forget to stir up civic pride. Provide for the small boy and enlist him if you can. It pays better than to permit arrest or threaten with arrest. Don't permit telegraph linemen to mutilate trees or climb them with spikes. Secure the passage of ordinances forcing wires and cables underground wherever practicable. Telegraph and telephone poles are unsightly and interfere with all schemes of street improvement and tree planting.

Women Paint Their Church.

Women are today playing a prominent part in the improvement and beautifying of towns. In Burlington, N. J., a number of women members of the congregation of a prominent church of that place undertook the job of painting their edifice lest a campaign of church improvement should fall through by a lack of funds. Headed by the pastor's wife, they bravely set to work with paint pots and brushes and then formed a pin money fund to employ a man to decorate the top of the building.
