If elected I will maintain an office or weekly office days at the county seat; will insist on a fair and equal assessment of taxes upon all property within the county, including standing timber, whereby the general rate of taxation will be reduced while the revenue will be increased; will give the county good roads; and will give the county a careful, honest business administration.

Look for my name on your Republican ballot.

Infantile Paralysis.

Washington at the present time is very much worked up over infantile paralysis. While there are only 20 cases really on record, it is stated that there must be 200 cases in the city, and up to now nobody can tell what causes it. The death rate has been about 15 per cent. The United States Government has taken hold of the matter, and will make an exhaustive investigation and will find the bug, if there is one, that is causing it. The very latest case to be reported is that of Heinrichs, the famous young pitcher with the Nationals. He was brought home and carried to the Georgetown University Hospital, supposedly with a slight attack of rheumatism in his "salary wing" in other words, in his pitching arm—and now the case has been diagnosed as infantile paralysis, for which there is absolutely no cure, it is said. Dr. Clifford Cox says there is a group of cells of the motor cords, located directed under the base of the neck, which control the movements of the right arm, and that these had been utterly destroyed. Dr. Cox says that this malady is erroneously branded "infantile." Statistics of its several epidemics show that about 70 per cent of cases are those of children under six years, the remainder of the victims being young and middle aged persons. The disease is also declared to be infectious. Whatever it is or is not, and whether it is caused by colds, microbes, or what not, it certainly is something horrible to contemplate, and it is not possible that there would be a human being in the United States who would object to having earnest and thorough inquiry made so as to establish the cause of the disease, if possible.

There is a very sensible suggestion which mothers who must feed their babies would do well to follow, even if they must deny themselves some luxury to get. It is said that goat's milk is preferable for the infant to cow's milk, and that where it is impossible to get pure cow's milk in hot weather, that goat's milk gives a pure and adequate supply of nutriment for the baby. Goats do not cost very much in the first place, and their keep is 50 per cent less than a cow's. A goat might be kept in one's back yard, so that its food is kept clean and sweet. In this way the baby would have an unending supply of the proper kind of milk. It is said that Hypocrates, who was the father of medicine, said to those who were suffering with tuberculosis in his day: "Go to the hills and drink goat's milk." Why is not that a good plan to follow now?

The "FIFIELD" has "boosters" because she gives satisfaction. Once tried always used. 11
