The Chamois Trail.

Every day at noon at Grindelwald there is a rush of visitors for the telescopes in order to gaze at one of the most interesting natural scenes in the Alps, "the chamois trail." Regularly at this hour a herd of twenty to thirty chamois may be seen passing in Indian file up the yawning abysses of the precipitous Mettenberg rocks, separating two glaciers, the male animals leading the way, the king of the herd keeping twenty yards in advance and on the watch. At the bottom of the Mettenberg, where the slope is freed from snow, the chamois find a meager subsistence when their usual feeding grounds are under deep snow. It is a curious fact that the chamois descend to their feeding grounds at dawn, when there is little likelihood of avalanches, and return to their haunts at an hour when avalanches—for this portion of the mountain has frequent avalanches—have already fallen and the danger is past.—Geneva Cor, Pall Mall Gazette.

Pussy and the Burglar.

A good dog has hitherto been considered the best protection against burglars, but a certain old lady differs from this view. She believes in cats, and her house being broken into not long ago, she proceeded to put her theory into practice, and with marvellously good results. The midnight hour had not long struck when she heard unusual sounds in the hall below. She slipped out of bed, took her faithful feline in her arms and walked quietly on to the landing. She leaned over. The burglar was on the stairs. Suddenly in an unlucky moment he struck a match upon the staircase. The lady could see the burglar, but the burglar could not see the lady. She held puss up and then dropped her upon the burglar's head. The cat uttered an unearthly screech and then commenced to scratch for all it was worth. Puss was certainly the willing worker. The next instant the man was outside in the street.—Manchester Guardian.

Whistler's Friendships.

That Whistler, the man of famous enemies, had faithful friends is recalled by Ford Madox Hueffer, writing of the pre-Raphaelites in Harper's Magazine. Madox Brown had a circular printed drawing the attention of all his old patrons to the merits of Whistler's etchings and begging them in the most urgent terms to make purchases because Whistler was in indigent circumstances. The story is that upon one occasion Madox Brown, going to a tea party at the Whistlers' in Chelsea, was met in the hall by Mrs. Whistler, who begged him to go to the poulterer's and purchase a pound of butter. The bread was cut, but there was nothing to put upon it. There was no money in the house, the poulterer had cut off his credit, and Mrs. Whistler said "she dared not send her husband, for he would certainly punch the tradesman's head."

Why He Waited.

The man who is anxiously watching the steeple jack at work 300 feet from the ground is approached by a passing acquaintance.

"Hello, Brown!" says the latter. "Are you still here? It's fully an hour ago that I saw you standing in the very same spot."

"That fellow up there gives me the cold shivers," says Brown. "He makes me feel weak in the knees."

"Going back to your office?" inquires the friend.

"I guess so," Brown reluctantly replies. "There doesn't seem to be much use in waiting any longer. I don't believe he is going to fall."

And he turned away with a lingering glance at the intrepid jack.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Great Age of Halley's Comet.

While Halley's comet has been identified as a member of our system for over 2,000 years, certain characteristics of its orbit lead us to believe that it has been with us at least ten or perhaps 100 times as long as that.

According to all accounts, it was a magnificent object at the time of the Norman conquest in 1065. Its head was equal to the full moon in size, and its tail increased to a wonderful length.—Century.

A Queer Hiding Place.

During a furious storm in Paris a janitor was struck on the shoulder by a small but heavy tin box which had fallen from an upper story of a house in the Rue de Valenciennes. The box was found to contain $6,000 in gold and notes. It was claimed at the police station by an elderly woman, who said that the money constituted her entire savings, which she had hidden by tying the box to the drainpipe outside her window.

Another Theory Demolished.

"It costs nothing to be polite."
"You're wrong. While I was politely picking up a glove for a lady yesterday my new four dollar hat blew off and rolled in front of a passing trolley car."—Chicago Record-Herald.

How He Got Out of It.

"My dear, before marriage you told me all your doings."
"Yes, but now I have come to think such talk savors too much of egotism."—Lippincott's.

Inherited.

Knicker-Jones is all the time wanting more money. Bocker—No wonder; his father was a college president and his mother was a woman.—New York Sun.

He only confers favors generously who appears, when they are once conferred, to renege them no more.—Johnson.

In many markets clean eggs are worth from 3 to 5 cents per dozen more than dirty. In this respect, owing to the failure of so many to gather eggs when strictly fresh, an immense amount is lost by the egg producers of the country.

When the new growth of raspberry canes has reached the desired length it is well to snip or cut off the terminal shoot. This will make a much stalker bush and will also result in the development of many strong lateral shoots, which will bear much larger quantities of fruit next year as a result of the pruning operation.

The latest thing in the shape of an anti-trust proceeding is a movement which bids fair to be started against the California Fruit Growers' Exchange as an organization in restraint of trade. Considering the fact that the railroads and commission men seem to be back of the proposed action, the affair can hardly be viewed in any other light than highly amusing, whatever the real merits of the situation may prove to be.

Many a high lived and valuable team of horses has been ruined by coming into the hands of an impatient and hot headed owner, who has not understood animal traits or taken the pains to use kindness when nothing else would serve the purpose as well. A horse should be made to recognize its owner or driver as its master. But there is nothing in this idea that conflicts with using good sense in the handling of it.

It is a pretty dull child that does not know by two years of age whether it or its parent is master of the situation so far as family discipline is concerned. It is not a pleasant thing to have a settlement with a child, but if this is done as it should be it will often prevent a great deal of worry and annoyance as well as be of great benefit to the child. Force of character, dignity and consistency in discipline are the factors that are chiefly needed.

The Danish Co-operative Egg Export association awards annually premiums for the best managed and most profitable poultry flocks. Last season the flock winning first prize consisted of sixty-three Brown Italians. Their feed consisted of wheat, oats, bran, ground bone, beets, hay sweepings and a small amount of barley meal, oatmeal and biscuits. The hens averaged 158 eggs each for the year, and the receipts from all sources were such as to give a net profit per hen of $1.93. Besides a yard and garden, the hens had the range of a pasture and were given liberal feeds of chopped greens.

The other day we saw a pear orchard which its owner had started to head close to four feet high, the trees having the appearance of slender whip stocks with tufts of feathers at the tip. In a section where the prevailing summer winds are from one quarter this will mean that all of the tree will have to be staked up to be kept in an upright position, and this at best will be a bogged up job. Later on as they come into bearing it is questionable if there will be sufficient strength of trunk to bear the fruit without breaking down. In this instance the situation is aggravated because all the lower buds on the trees have been snipped off, so that the growing of a lower headed tree is well nigh impossible.

The chestnut blight, a fungous growth known as the black knot variety, threatens the ultimate destruction of virtually all the groves of native chestnut trees in the north Atlantic states unless methods can be adopted to hold in check or eradicate the pest. This particular blight spreads by means of spores, these being carried by birds, by squirrels and sometimes by the wind. The spores or seeds get a foothold and develop in the cambium layer, which is located just beneath the outer bark. So far no effective means has been discovered for checking the disease, though it has been suggested by those making a study of the question that felling all of the chestnut trees in a five mile zone encircling the affected area might prove a barrier to the spread of the disease, as it would give the fungus nothing on which to subsist. So far as known, the chestnut is the only tree affected by this particular pest.

While a sour soil may be indicated by a refusal of the clover family to grow thereon, the question may be easily and accurately determined by making a test with blue litmus paper. This may be got at any drug store and is inexpensive. A boring should be made with a two inch auger in the part of the field which shows most evidence of sourness and two good sized balls made of the earth obtained near the surface and of that ten or twelve inches down. These balls should be split and strips of the litmus paper laid between and kept there about fifteen minutes. If the paper is turned pink in color the evidence is conclusive that the soil is sour and needs sweetening with an application of lime, which may be applied in the shape of the raw ground stone or the pulverized burned product, there being little choice between the two. The chances are that if the soil is sour it is also run down and would be benefited by an application of stable manure, which will greatly increase its productivity.
