The Submerged Tenth.

Gen. Booth claims a marvelous measure of success for his Darkest England scheme of colonial industries and metropolitan shelters, upon which he has expended about $185,000. He has, he says, helped to feed 5,000,000 of hungry people, furnished a million with warm shelter, found work for over ten thousand unemployed, reclaimed and placed in situations 134 criminals, gathered from the streets and sent to situations 1,917 friendless girls, found and restored to their friends 1,295 lost people, and, generally speaking, wrought an immense amount of benefit, to say nothing of the miraculous reformations effected. He has spent $35,000 more than he received and is therefore that much in debt, and he asks to have it made up.

Saving the Aurochs.

As the American buffalo has nearly disappeared from this, its native land, the European representative of the same genus, the aurochs, is no longer found anywhere but in the forests of Bialystock, in western Russia. Formerly this most powerful of all the indigenous animals of Europe was hunted down in Bialystock as everywhere else. But since the Russian government assumed the management of the forests, the aurochs is no longer allowed to be persecuted but is protected by foresters appointed by the government. Although the animal seems to be gradually dying out, there is hope that it can be kept flourishing yet for many generations to come.

SOMETHING OUTRE.

The Tramp Was Disturbed for a Moment, But No More.

The woman who hastened into the pasty and returned with a saleratus biscuit for the peripatetic stranger at her gate wore a gingham gown, which she had obviously buidled with her own hands.

It was cut on the bias and did not hang straight.

"My man," she remarked, in comprehensive tones, "I will give you this biscuit on one condition."

"Name it, madam."

The tramp, for such he undoubtedly was, leaned gracefully upon one foot.

"You must saw a stick of wood."

A look of pain flitted across his face.

"I cannot, madam, I cannot."

"Think well," urged the woman. "It was only fifteen minutes ago that another man in your business sawed a stick of wood for one of my biscuits."

The tramp started violently.

"You astonish me," he exclaimed.

A great perplexity seemed to be oppressing him.

"Was it a tall man?" he inquired, with some anxiety, after a considerable pause.

"It was."

"Wore a checked vest with a hole on the left side?"

The woman nodded.

"A long coat, very slimy?"

"Yes."

"Had a mean, hang-dog look?"

"Decidedly."

The tramp heaved a sigh of relief.

"That's Bill Stokes," he announced, with a gladson smile. "He's always doing something outre. I feared it might be somebody of standing."

There was that which was beatific about the expression of his eyes as he went his way.—Detroit Tribune.

And the Clouds Rolled By.

A cloud had overcast their sky and a tear fell here and there as the gray shut out the blue.

She was piqued at some little dereliction of his and had taken her smile away from him as a petulant mother takes a rose from a child.

He had remonstrated and pleaded, but she was obdurate.

She spoke unkindly, even angrily, but he showed no resentment.

He had erred; he sought forgiveness.

"You are constantly foolish," she said, as if in defense of her severity.

"Yes, dear," he begged, "but think how foolishly constant I am."—Detroit Free Press.

THE TEMPLE OF BAAL

A Whole Village Now Inclosed Within the Ancient Walls.

There rises a huge wall, seventy-five feet high, inclosing a square court of which the side is four hundred and seventy feet long. Part of the wall, having fallen into ruins, has been rebuilt from the ancient materials, but the whole of the wall is new, with its beautiful pilasters, niches and arches.

As the visitors enter the court they stand still in astonishment at the extraordinary sight which meets their eyes, for here, crowded within these four walls, is the native village of Baalmar. It was natural enough for the Arabs to build their mud huts within these ready-made fortifications, and the Blackwood's Magazine, but the impression produced by such a village in such a place is indescribably strange. The temple, so to speak, is eaten out at the core, and little but the shell remains. But here and there a fluted Corinthian column or group of columns with entablature still perfect rises in its graceful far over the weathered masonry, the rich, creamy color of the limestone and the beautiful mouldings of the capitals contrasting with the clear blue of the cloudless sky. The best view of the whole is to be obtained from the roof of the naos, which, once beautiful and adorned with sculpture, is now all battered and defaced, and has been metamorphosed into a small little mosque. To describe the view from that roof were indeed a hopeless task. High into the clear blue air and the golden sunshine rise the stately cypresses, growled and jumbled, and heaped together here low, untouched by the gladdening sunbeams, unrefreshed by the pure, fresh air, lies all the squalor and wretchedness of an Arab mud hut village.

TUTELARY TREES.

Some of the Serpents Considered sacred by Peoples of the East.

People had their tutelary trees just as they had their tutelary gods; the former being the plants and shrubs of the latter, says the Gentleman's Magazine. Among the Scandinavians the ash was held to be the most sacred tree. Serpents, according to their belief, dared not approach it. Hence the women left their children with entire confidence under its shade while they went on with their harvesting. The Jews and the Arabs place the date palm before all other trees. It was, they say, made of the same clay, as Adam, and prophesied through its leaves. The rabbis accredited Abraham with a knowledge of what was thus conveyed for his direction. In Persia the inhabitants burn wax tapers, as at a shrine, before the trees, which they hold sacred, the oriental plane and the cypress. They hope thus to obtain the cure of their maladies, and the accomplishment of their wishes. So throughout the length and breadth of India, the Ficus religiosa, under which Buddha rested for seven years plunged in dying thought, is dedicated to religious worship, and may on no account be felled or destroyed. With more universality, but not less sincere reverence, do the peasants of Russia prostrate themselves before the trees which they are about to cut, and deprecate the vengeance of the deities whose resting places they then proceed to destroy.

CLIMATE OF EGYPT.

Something About the Atmospheric Conditions in the Valley of the Nile.

From a study of the climate of Egypt recently made by Dr. J. Hann, says the London Globe, it appears that for three or four days in March or April a hot, dusty wind visits Cairo and destroys the foliage of many of the trees. During summer hot winds—the Etesian winds of the ancients, to which Thales ascribed the rise of the Nile—blow from the north, but, although dry, they are clean. Toward September a dampness of the air accompanies the rise of the Nile, dew falls occasionally and the heat becomes oppressive, owing to the moisture.

October and November bring snow and then a morning fog or a shower of rain; but after that the weather becomes pleasant and steady, snow is unknown, frost is very rare and rain is also infrequent.

The highest temperature recorded at Cairo during the seventy-one years ending 1875 was 117 degrees Fahrenheit, in
