GOING WITHOUT BREAKFAST.

The eating habits of the people have very much to do with their health and happiness, and a regulation in such matters may effect considerable improvement along that line. The New York Journal of Hygiene says that it is not safe to say positively that is best for everyone to go without breakfast, eating enough at the other meals to make up any deficiency caused by it, but many of those who have experimented on this line have found that for them it has proved a blessing. The corpulent, dyspeptic, the over-eater, and sedentary lions of dollars in old mortgages, and bringing that about is to break into the persons are almost always benefited, and the non-breakfast diet has more adherents than many suspect.
