THE PESSIMIST has said that New England civilization and religious life is in these latter days falling below the high standard of puritanism set up by our fathers. Unfriendly observers prophesy that protestantism is to be supplanted in Massach usetts by Catholicism, but friendly critics declare that protestant New England is modifying Catholicism. Will the modification injure the old form of worship? Not a bit of it. It is improved. Within the past three years the influence of New England has Canada against the authority of the church in political affairs. The Catholic in Quebec has learned from his experience in New England or from that of his friends still there that he can exercise his independent judgment as a citizen in casting his vote and still be true to his religious faith. "The Puritan element in New England, remarks the Congregationalist, is not only lifting to higher levels of freedom and rightcourness those who have come to share its inheritance, but is extending to other lands its influence for good."-Hillsboro Independent.
