SOME OTHER DAY!

There are wonderful things we are going to do Some other day
And harbors we hope to drift into
Some other day.
With folded hands, the oars that trail,
We watch and wait for a favoring gale
To fill the folds of an idle sail Some other day.

We know we must toil if ever we win Some other day, But we say to ourselves there's time to begin Some other day,
And so, deferring, we lotter on Until at last we find withdrawn
The strength of the hope we leas
Some other day.

And when we are old and our race is run
Some other day,
We fret for the things that might have been done
Some other day.
We trace the path that leads us where
The beckoning hand of grim despair
Leads us yonder out of the here
Some other day.

***************** My Birthday Umbrella

An Amusing Sketch Showing the Difficulty of Working a New Patent.

************** Like most people, I have only one birthday a year. Susan intended to celebrate the event by giving me a present. Susan is my wife. We had been married a year, but fortune had not smiled upon us, and we were terribly hard up. Consequently Susan's spending capacity was limited.

She was going to buy me an umbreila. The present was saved up for and talked about a good deal before the auspicious day. We went to the shop together to secure the gift. Susan's idea of the amount to be expended - heaven bless her - was, I think, about $1.50. The keeper of the umbrella shop looked pained and concerned at the idea of respectable customers daring to purchase one of his cheap ginghams.

He had a $2.50 article, now, a really decent thing.
We saw it. The handle was very plain. It did not please Susan so much as that of a $3 one produced simultaneously. There was no pushing to open it-the thing was a patent. There was no fumbling in a shower of rain to open this umbrella. One had only to release a little spring in the handle, and the umbrella opened itself half way. This last luxury completely won over Susan. The bargain was clinched.

proud and joyous that she had been able to make me "such a beautiful birthday present"-one so much nicer than she had at first intended. On the way the elements, as if bent on pleasing Susan, sent us a sharp shower of rain. Hor eyes dilated with pleasure and triumph as she produced the umbrella. "Let me open it!" she cried vivaciously as the raindrops came pattering down. She touched the spring, and, lo! the umbrella partly opened of its own accord. How Ingenious! To run it up to the top of the stick was the work of a second, and we sheltered snugly under its ample canopy, side by side, arm

The rain descended in torrents. We had not far to go. The district rallway station was only 100 yards ahead. Yet, before we arrived there, the silk of the umbrella was soaked through and through by the deluge. We were just in time for a train, with half a minute to spare. We did not trouble to shut the umbrella down until well inside the ticket office.

The thing would not shut. Susan declared it was because I did not understand the patent. She begged me to leave it to her while I got the tickets. I squeezed my way to the ticket office, paid the fares and returned to find Susan still struggling. We had not a moment to spare.

I tackled the umbrella myself, edging meanwhile toward the staircase. The wretched thing would not go down, no matter how I coaxed it.

Susan was now at the gate, advising me to desist from my struggles in the gangway, saying it would be perfectly easy to get the thing down on the platform. The train was at a standstill, all the passengers had jumped in, isolud-Susan, who urged and encouraged me to more frantic efforts, standing inside the door of a carriage, while I remained writhing upon the platform. "Step in there! Step in there!" cried the guard. I stepped in, still clinging to the handle of the open abomination. Susan was purple with agitation. I managed by a dexterous maneuver to get the bandle of the umbrella through the window and shut the door, leaving the epen canopy spread over the window. What little light there was was thus prevented penetrating the dim interior of the carriage. "Here, I say, put that umbrella down!" came a voice from the plat-form. As if I hadn't been trying to! Was I not trying at that very moment with all my might?

The door was wrenched forcibly open with a jerk, which shot me out on to the platform. Susan was compelled to jump out after me, and there we were ever. The train steamed out of the "The next one will be in 15 minis plenty of time. Don't fuss. And poor Ted will be waiting on the doorstep in the pouring rain, with no one to let him in." Everything was tried, short of jumping upon the confounded thing, but all can fetch it tomorrow," she suggested.

We explained the difficulty to the cloakroom porter, who, with much muscle and even less ingenuity than ourselves, attempted the impossible feat of closing the horror.

"You must fetch that umbrella," said Susan on the following day. "The porters might do some damage to it in that cloakroom. The surly cloakroom porter recognized me. There was an open umbrella, just as I had left it, standing in a cor "Why, haven't you shut the thing?"

I exclaimed testily.
"Try it!" he answered laconically. I did try. It was as bad as ever. "Oh; hang the thing!" I cried. shall have to walk the wretched thing home as it is!" Reader, have you ever discovered courself carrying an open umbrella in the street, in a fit of absentmindedness, some time after a shower has finished? But you have never paraded two miles of thoroughfares with your umbrella up when there is not a spot of rain on the pavement and the day is bright and fair, with not even a ray of sunshine to provide an excuse for your eccentricity. Suddenly-biff! A loud shout of derision. The umbrella was nearly knocked out of my The remains of a large cauliround. Imagine my horror at beholding that I was followed by at least 20 street urchins! Twenty mouths were wide open with derisive laughter, emitting ear splitting yells. I turned and fled. Don't think that I ran. Oh, dear, no! It would take more than a crowd of boys to make me run away. Yet I fear that I burried somewhat. At last there was my house, only 200 yards away! Susan should presently hear a little plain speaking upon the absurdity of purchasing patents that would not work. She happened to be at the window and saw a noisy crowd approaching from the distance, with an open umbrella in their midst. A horrible fear that I had been run over or that something equally terrible had happened brought her to the front door step, so that when I arrived she was there ately went up to ber burned mouth; ready to take the umbrella from my aching hands. "Why didn't you put it down before you started, dear?" she asked quite nicely and gently. "Why didn't I put It down? Why"-

But what was the good of similes? The urchins formed a semicircle round the doorway. "Let me shut it, dear!" she said, taking it with all a woman's tenderness and pressing her finger upon the spring

In the orthodox fashion.

Lo and behold, the umbrella shut up! It closed just for all the world as though nothing had been the matter with it! While I rested, exhausted and perspiring. Susan put the umbrella up and down again with the greatest ease.

And from that day to this it has never gone wrong. I never buy anything with a patent in it now. Susan says it shows a retrograde spirit in an age of advancement. But women are always optimistic .-London Answers.

"You land, a red cross on a white ground, the parrow red lines drawn from corner to corner. By placing the cross of St. George on that of St. Andrew we have "the Jack," as ordered in 1606 by James 1, whose signature was always "Jacques;" hence the expression, "the Jack." By laying the cross of Et. Patrick over that of St. Andrew and then "We shall have to leave it in the cloakroom, George," she cried. "Leave it just as it is. Don't break it.
