SONG. BY GEX. ALBERT PAKE.

When Autumn's chilly winds complain, And red leaves withered fall, We know that Spring will laugh again, And leaf and flower recall.

But when Love's saddening Autumn wears The hues that death presage, No Spring in Winter's lap prepares A second golden age.

So when Life's Autumn sadly sighe, Yet smiles its cold tears through, No Spring with warm and sunny skies The soul's youth will genew.

Love blooms but once, and dies-for all; Life has no second Spring: The frost must come, the snow must fall, Loud as the lark may sing.

O, Love! O, life! ye fade like flowers, That droop and die in June! The present, oh! too short is ours, And Autumn comes too soon.

GENERAL MISCELLANY.

DAME FORTUNE SMILES.

Some days since we saw a statement that a young woman, named Ellen Grev, who lives in Washington county. between Fort Edward and Sandy Hill had fallen heir to an immense tortune in England. But thinking that the statement would prove to be a canard, as such statements usually are, we took room. no notice of it. We have since learned however, from reliable sources, some facts in regard to this romantic case, which, in connection with the reported magnitude of the bequest, deserve to engaged to be married, but, without teen million dollars.
