Agriculture and Horticulture.
Chemistry has been called "the corner-stone of agriculture." It is true in the abstract, for by chemical change the plant is enabled to receive the elements that go toward their organization. "Agriculture is the groundwork of the wealth of nations," is a universally received axiom. It is true that without agriculture no nation could emerge from barbarism, and the higher the agriculture the greater the possible civilization, but none but the crudest agriculture could exist unless manufactures, art and commerce rendered implements perfect and cheap, with commerce to quickly and economically transport the products of agriculture. Horticulture may be called the poetry of agriculture. It is refining in its nature, it broadens the mind, creates a love for the beautiful and its products are the most healthful food of man. An indifferent farmer never made a good horticulturist. A good farmer may, for to be successful he must begin by being a good farmer. The word agriculture is derived from the Latin word ager, a field, and cultura, cultivation. Literally the cultivation of a field. From the first we also get our word acre, and was undoubtedly originally used to express husbandry. Now it is used in its broad sense, to embrace all that pertains to the farm, the orchard, the garden and the ornamentation of the homestead. The word husbandry is now used to denote what pertains to the farm, and the word horticulture all that pertains to the garden. The word horticulture comes from two Latin words, hortus, a garden, and cultura, from colere to till. It is now subdivided into pomology, the culture of orchards; horticulture, the cultivation of forest trees; gardening, the cultivation of garden fruits and vegetables; floriculture, the florist's art, and landscape gardening or the formation of artificial effects in the landscapes, the highest art in horticulture. Husbandry is also now divided into many and separate branches, although one or more are generally combined. The two great divisions of husbandry are field husbandry, subdivided into grain husbandry, grass husbandry, seed husbandry, cotton planting, sugar-cane planting, tobacco culture and hemp raising; when several of these are combined it is called mixed husbandry. The other great division of husbandry is stock raising. This again is divided into horse breeding, cattle breeding, sheep husbandry, swine breeding, poultry raising and stock feeding and fattening. When a number of the divisions are combined it is called mixed husbandry, the most profitable of all, and he whose land is suitable for the greatest combination and is himself competent to superintend each division is in situation to place himself on the road to success, and to surpass those who are not so fortunately circumstanced. It is always best, however, to be confined in your agricultural operations to such branches as you understand and your land and locality are best adapted for.—[S. F. Chronicle.]

Onions.
The onion trials of the last season at the New York experiment station were with thirty-four named varieties, which were planted in rows ten feet long and eleven and one-half inches apart, the seeds being covered one-half inch deep. Three rows of each variety were planted in order to note the difference in effect upon yield of closeness in planting. In the first row the plants were thinned to three inches apart, in the second to two inches and in the third to one inch apart. The earliest variety to mature its bulb was the extra Early Red, in 116 days from planting; the last, ten varieties, in 173 days. In nearly every case the yield was the smallest in the first row, where the spaces were three inches, and the largest in the third row, where the spaces were one inch; but in no case was the increased yield of the second and third rows in proportion to the increased number of plants. As a rule the largest bulbs were in the first row. There seems to be some foundation for the opinion held by some onion growers that the bulbs develop better, offering fewer scullions, where they are so close together in the rows as to crowd each other. The following experiment with onions is quite suggestive: The soil was thoroughly pulverized over a small plot of ground, and on an adjoining plot of equal size the ground was packed as hard as possible by repeated pounding with a heavy man. The surface of both plots was then covered with finely pulverized soil to the depth of half an inch, and on June 2d three rows on each plot were planted with seed of the large Weathersfield onion. Late planting was disadvantageous to the yield, but the three rows on the compact soil yielded nine pounds seven ounces of merchantable bulbs, while the three rows on the pulverized soil yielded but three pounds three ounces. The percentage of vegetation in the two plants was not noticeably different, although the vegetation was prompter on the compact soil.—[Ex.]

The Canker-worm.
An affective method of terminating the existence of the male moth is said to be like that used to catch the codlin moth, viz: Cans or bottles half filled with molasses, vinegar and water, mixed in the proportion of a quart of molasses and a pint of vinegar in ten quarts of water, suspended among the branches of the trees. This mixture has great attraction for the male moth, which by it may be caught in large numbers. As a means of driving canker-worms from the branches of trees, gas tar burned among them is successfully used. The tar should be placed in an old pan, to which an iron handle is attached, and the burning may best be done while the dew is falling on a still evening. The operator should stand under the tree, so that the fumes of the tar may thoroughly pervade each branch. The fumes do not kill the worms, but drive them out of the trees, as well as other kinds of insects. Farmers following the above methods will have no trouble in getting the best of canker worms. As smart-weed or pepper-weed is a good remedy against the cabbage worm, as soon as it is ripe gather what you may want and hang it up to dry, so that in the spring when you want to use it, it can be reduced to powder, which sprinkle over your plants.—[S. F. Chronicle.]

Talmage's Talk.
New York, May 26.—In his sermon yesterday on the late panic Talmage said: "I want you to arraign this monster crime of extravagance. There are five thousand women in New York and Brooklyn each of whom expends on dress over $2,000. It has got to such a pass that when we go to church to weep over our sins we must wipe away our tears with $150 handkerchiefs. [Great laughter.] There are scores of men who live in the midst of every luxury who spend everything on themselves and when they die their children are thrown on the charity of the world. The death of such a man is grand larceny. [Laughter.] He swindles the world as he steps into his coffin. His bones ought to be sold to an anatomical museum for the benefit of his children. [Laughter.] I draw the knife so that it cuts close. I thought many of you might get angry and leave the church. You stand it well." [Great laughter.] Talmage then spoke at some length of the extravagance in funerals and said that "some men put into the tombstone and casket what they ought to lay out in bread." Before the sermon he read a letter that he had received from a man living in Colorado, who signed himself "Amateur Miller" and sent Talmage a check for $250, to apply as he deemed best. Talmage said he had given half of it to the Bureau for the relief of the disabled soldiers of the north and half to the Home for crippled southern soldiers at Richmond. This announcement was received with cheers.

Wool and Sheep.
There are several things a farmer can do to make sheep afford a profit, for since the fall in price sheep do not pay as they did. One thing to be done is to breed for the best grade of wool and another is to grow mutton sheep and make up by increased value in meat any deficit in the price of wool. To grow crops without sheep is not convenient. Winter wheat that has been fed down by sheep is much more certain to make a crop, than when not so fed down. Sheep are worth much as cleaners of fallowlands; they furnish the best kind of fresh meat for the farmer's table; the city markets offer a good price for mutton. The operations of the farm are generally facilitated by having a small flock of good sheep to enrich the soil. Every prosperous farmer knows their value and all such will be sure to keep sheep and use them to advantage.

Some, like G. W. Hunt of Waldo hills, are introducing mutton breeds into Oregon. Mr. Hunt's Shropshires attracted attention when exhibited at the state fair. The wethers weigh heavily and the mutton is remarkably fine meat. Such mutton will soon command a high price—actually a premium—in the markets of our cities and butchers will pay readily, a cent a pound, or more than that difference between common sheep and good mutton breeds. It is apparent that farmers generally do not appreciate the importance of good meat or we should hear of more flocks than now exist of Shropshires, Cotswolds, Leicester, Southdowns, Oxfordshires, etc. There are some of all these breeds in this part of Oregon and if well bred and cared for we believe that sheep raising will prove as profitable as it ever has been among us.—[Farmer.]

"Prohibition would destroy $300,000,000 of vested property," says Senator Duly. Admitted; but how about the figures on the other side? Statistics show that $800,000,000 a year is destroyed direct by license; that to this must be added the lives of 100,000 drunkards, the pauperization of 50,000 families, including 100,000 children, and the turning out of 100,000 criminals of various grades, the money value alone of the total exceeding $2,000,000,000! The senator should let figures alone unless he is prepared to accept their full value.—[Ex.]
