WIT AND HUMOR.

"This speech crop is safe," said the stump orator as he locked up his written bombast in a fire-proof vault.—New York Journal.

An indignant disclaimer. Mamma—"Now, Billy, you mustn't be shy, you know." Billy—"I see no shy—I see rude!"—London Punch.

This is anniversary week, the season of the year when good people look over the world to see how much good they have done.—Hartford Post.

"The oldest inhabitant is usually a man," says an exchange. But it needn't be so if women would only stand up to their ages.—Burlington Free Press.

He had just hinted that he could not spare the time to take her to a picnic. "Oh, I see," she responded cruelly, "time is money."—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

A young pianist says he "always closes his eyes when he plays." It is different with those within hearing distance; they always close their ears when he plays.—Norriston Herald.

A western paper says: Mr. Meeker of Argo, Col., has a duck that laid an egg with a nickle imbedded in its yolk. This is not a freak of nature—it is a California newspaper lie.—Daily Graphic.

The seashore season will shortly open and as usual, one wave from a woman's handkerchief will be to the men far more attractive than all the waves of the sea.—Philadelphia Chronicle-Herald.

From South Carolina: Native (after a few minutes conversation)—"I bet a boss you'er a Nuthern'er, hain't yer?" Tourist—"Why, yes." Native—"I lowed yer wuz; I knew yer by yer brogue."—Harvard Lampoon.

"Can you draw a dog?" said a lady of a gentleman caller. The youth blushed crimson and said it depends upon two things, the size of the dog and the strength of the material in his pants.—Burlington Free Press.

"Why is it," said an ex-governor to an old acquaintance, "that when I am out of office you never speak to me?" "Because," the acquaintance replied, "when you are in office you never speak to me."—Arkansas Traveler.

A small boy testified in an Austin Justice's court that the affray took place on a Sunday. "How do you know it was on a Sunday?" "Because that day I had to go to the side door of the saloon to get beer for dinner."—Texas Siftings.

"Why do you crows?" asked a goose of a venerable chanticleer. "I cackle-ate it's 'cause I can't chant a lay," replied the wretched fowl, as he clawed up another square yard of his master's newly seeded garden.—New York Journal.

A merchant, who died suddenly not long ago, left on his desk a letter he had intended mailing to a correspondent. An Irish clerk finding it sent it off, after adding the postscript, "Since writing the above I have died."—Fort Wayne Hoosier.

"If there is one thing I hate more than another," said Mrs. Limberchin, "that thing is gossip. Of course, when a family moves into a neighborhood I tell them everything I know about the people here, and all the scandals connected with each family in town. But, then, you see, I don't do this out of any love for gossiping—not at all; but merely as an act of kindness. If the new-comers didn't know all the scandals in town, just as like as not they'd be saying something that might hurt somebody's feelings; but knowing everybody's weak points, they're always on their guard, don't you see?"

THE HOP CROP AND PROSPECTIVE MARKET.

The hop crop of Oregon is mostly in this valley, where new hop yards were set out in '82-'83, some of which will come into full bearing this year, so as to give at least twenty-five per cent. increase to the product. Much increase of acreage took place over on Yakima country, in Washington, and some yards were planted south of Snake river and in the Palouse and Spokan regions. It is estimated that the Oregon crop will amount to 5,000 bales of 200 pounds each, or a million pounds of hops while as many more will be shipped from the sound ports. At a rough estimate, we should have a million pounds of hops in Oregon, and fully as many in Washington. The harvest may exceed that yield, but will not fall below it unless, some disaster happens to the crop we cannot foresee. The hop market is excited by reports from the English hop growing districts, which state that a blight is on the growing hops that renders it probable that the English crop will be a failure. On that supposition prices have advanced, and nothing can be done towards buying the growing crops. Some one said lately that he didn't believe hop growers would look at fifty cents a pound for their growing crops, but that would be unreasonable, for hops can hardly go at that figure with what we know of the world's needs and supplies. We learn from a buyer that he has offered twenty cents unavailingly. No doubt hops will mount up in price, but our people have learned some thing by experience two years ago. It is certain the hop crop will do its share to make the times improve, and may add a million dollars to the finances of the region. We shall watch the markets carefully to get the most reliable information obtainable for the benefit of our readers. It was considered hazardous to plant out heavy hop yards in 1882, as some did but they acted wisely. The blight in the old country seems to be continuous, and sometimes is felt in New York state. The use of hops is also increasing, and the business of growing hops seems to be more a certainty than it has been for some decades back. Our country has proved to be well suited to their cultivation, and climate and soil unite to perfect their growth. Appearances justify the confidence people have in making it a leading product. It is not possible to say definitely concerning prices, further than that hop growers will be well repaid.—Willamette Farmer.

Feeding Pigs the First 150 Days.

As we have often said, pig raisers should avoid giving young pigs a specially fattening food. In the dairy there is plenty of skim-milk, which is well adapted to grow the young pig, as it is rich in phosphate of lime to grow the bones, and of cheesy, albuminoid matter to grow the muscles. A little corn may be given with the milk. Such pigs never grow into little round dumplings of fat, but grow into rangy shoats. Yet, probably a majority of our readers have the pigs without the skim-milk, and we must name the food for pigs under such circumstances. One of the best foods for the pig is a small quantity of linseed meal, a tablespoonful to the fifteen-pound pig, increased as the pig grows; this, fed with oats and corn ground together, made into a slop, will cause rapid growth but not premature fattening. Cotton-seed meal is sometimes used, but we cannot recommend it for young pigs. It is not so easily digested, and it has not the same beneficial laxative effect as linseed meal, which is to be a promoter of health in the pig. This can be proved at any considerable town all over the country, and those who raise and feed large numbers of hogs can afford to send to the oil mills for it, and get it at wholesale rates. It can be bought at the mills at $20 to $25 per ton, and it is always worth these prices as a food. It is so rich in muscle-forming matter as to be of great value to feed with corn, which is so deficient in this quality.—[Live Stock-Journal.

A Woman of Courage.

Fordham is not a pleasant town for women to promenade after dark. A lot of ruffians known as the "Swamp Gang," are regarded with terror by the peaceful inhabitants and with respect by the stray policeman who sometimes finds himself there. Hence it is that women borrow revolvers when they go out at night. On Sunday night Mrs. Markstein, an Irish woman who is married to a German, was obliged to go to a drugstore to get medicine for her little daughter. She lives near St. John's college and had a dark and lonesome road to travel; so, after the manner of her fair sister, she stuck a Colt's revolver in her pocket. She had turned homeward when she noticed that she was being followed by a man. Now Mrs. Markstein is able-bodied, and in her younger days she used to boast that she could whip any lad in Cannought. She smiled to herself therefore and marched steadily forward. The man gained on her, and she lessened her pace until he reached her; then she asked him what he wanted. He made no answer, but put out his hand with the intention of clutching her dress. Mrs. Markstein drew her husband's revolver, and cocking it, placed the muzzle before the startled ruffian, and said quietly: "Oh! an' did ye want to know me? What a swate little creature ye are, shure. An' would ye walk to me house wid me?"

The man looked at Mrs. Markstein and then at the revolver, and with the revolver close against his side he walked with the plucky woman toward her home. About half way two other men appeared and inquired: "Well, Jim! what's yer got?"

"Say, 'she's my girl,'" whispered Mrs. Markstein to Jim, and all the while prodding his ribs with the pistol. "She's my girl, boys," repeated the man.

"All right," was the answer, and Mrs. Markstein was relieved of further company. When she arrived at her gate she told the man to go home, and fired her revolver in the air to frighten his steps as he hurried down the road without saying farewell.

The shot brought out Mr. Markstein, who having heard his wife's story, filled a pitcher with beer, called in some compatriots, and told them what a "prave leedle frau vos mein Prigdot." The police were furnished with a description of the man and they are searching for "Jim." Inspector Byrnes has detailed some of his men with the intention of breaking up the "Swamp Gang."
