WIT AND HUMOR.

Cork-screw suits for fishing excursions are advertised. A cork-screw suits very well for a fishing hammock.—[Fall River Advance.

A milkman in Cincinnati was drowned the other day. He probably knows himself now what too much water is like.—[Oil City Derrick.

It is said that glue is used in the cheaper grades of ice-cream. This accounts for some girls being so stuck up.—[Burlington Free Press.

"Five thousand molecules can sit comfortably on the point of a pin." Herein the molecule differs materially from a man.—[Norristown Herald.

"Going into politics any this fall?" said the merchant to the dentist. "Expect to take the stump occasionally," was the reply.—[Marathon Independent.

"Annex Canada!" cried the bank cashier. "Heavens, no; I hope not. It would just take away all chances of success in my profession."—[Lowell Citizen.

"No, Laura, no! They do not 'open the campaign' with a can-opener, they do it with a corkscrew. How little alas, do women know about politics."—[Burdette.

"Oh where shall we find content?" wails a magazine poet. He should invite a homely girl to polish off a couple of quarts of ice-cream with him.—[Burlington Free Press

When a man takes your hand with a firm, cordial grip it begets a similar grasp from you, but when an innocent little apple takes a grip you generally lose yours.—[Yonkers Statesman.

Heard at Saratoga—"What is that girl's name? She looks very awkward and rustic at this garden party." "I don't know exactly, but I should say she was a Miss Fit."—[Boston Budget.

A few mornings ago a tramp applied at a house in Austin Avenue for some breakfast.

"Go into the back yard and chop up a few armfuls of firewood, and I'll give you your breakfast."

"Well if my breakfast is ready, I don't see why I should work for it."

"It will not be your breakfast until you cut some wood."

"Cut wood! If you want any wood cut you had better hire some poor working man to do it. You ought to know by my looks that I don't work for my living. Good morning."

A wealthy New York gentleman advertised for a coachman. Among those who applied for the position was one who answered all the requirements.

"I will hire you a year at fifty dollars a month."

"The salary is all right, but—"

"But what?"

"I would like to ask you a question."

"What is it?"

"Are you President of any National bank, or do you speculate in Wall street?"

"What's that your business?"

"Well, if you do, I want my wages in advance."

Editors have put up with all manner of taunts and insults. Not so long ago, at a social gathering, an Austin lady said to a young man who is connected with a local paper:

"You ought to belong to a church choir."

"But I can't sing. What put the idea of my belonging to a choir into your head?"

"O nothing except that I was reading the other day that a San Francisco church proposes to introduce harp music into the choir, and there is not much difference, you know, between a harp and a lyre, so I thought I'd just make the suggestion."—[Siftings.

PLANT FEEDING.

For years and years past we have been trying to find out how best to feed animals. Men have been feeding animals from remote ages and yet it is only within a few years past that the scrutinizing eye of science has detected that there has been great waste, because the various articles fed to animals have not been properly proportioned among themselves. Experience has shown that it was best to give a mixed ration of concentrated food (grain) and that which is decidedly less so (fodder). Using the terms in a general sense, corn and fodder have been the accepted ration for animals. But corn (all grain) and fodder (the various kinds of long forage) vary very much in composition, and in the absence of chemical analysis and very careful experiment it had not been discovered what was a typical ration—one that came nearest to meeting the necessities of the animal. Now, however, since typical rations have been ascertained, the way is well laid out for the farmer to mix and prepare different kinds of food so as to effect the greatest saving and produce the largest results with least expenditure. The history of plant feeding runs a very nearly parallel course to that of animal feeding. In a general way it was quite early ascertained that the excrement and urine of animals, and ashes, would make plants grow; later it was discovered that certain mineral substances, such as plaster, marl, phosphates, etc., had a similar effect. But most of those were very compound substances and did not widely among themselves in composition. Just what elements, or combination of elements, in them constituted good plant-food rations was a matter little understood until very recent times. During the last twenty or thirty years considerable progress in this direction has been made, but perfection has not been reached by a good deal. The similarity in general composition of the numberless commercial fertilizers now sold shows that men are beginning to have some ideas of plant-food rations. How they reached their conclusions is a matter of interest—partly, doubtless, from the teachings of agricultural chemists and partly from field tests. It could not be expected that in the beginning they had all the light necessary to make faultless manures, but now that the matter has been taken up at the various agricultural stations of the country and properly qualified men are working earnestly upon the problem, it may reasonably be hoped that in a few years typical plant rations will be quite as fully perfected, as those of animals. There is a decided drift in favor of using less ammonia for many crops, for the successful growing of which it has formerly been deemed essential to use large quantities. This is particularly true in regard to corn. It is now pretty definitely determined how and what to feed to best accomplish certain results with animals, and the time is rapidly approaching, in the light of science, when exactly the amount of feed and the particular kind for any green crop will be known. When this is more perfectly known and the tiller of the soil is able to tell what his soil is and the ingredients necessary to produce a certain crop, the agriculturist will to a certain extent be a complete master of the situation—at least in no event will there be any excuse for any one going contrary to the laws of nature and plant growth. The amount of grain and the best suited for the horse, the cow, the sheep and the hog is now within the knowledge of all, and plant food, soil, etc., will ere long be as familiar to the farm student as are the requisites in regard to feeding stock to the average husbandman of the times. When such is the case it will be expected that no grievous mistakes will be made and that the general crop will be greatly augmented and the soil kept in far better producing condition, for all will know what to feed both the land and the plant.—[Chronicle.

In summer, when the ground is dry, Our wayward minds impressing With what is meet—what we should buy— Light calf skin is a blessing. But, when the rain descends, and mud Impedes perambulation, We need a boot both strong and good To reach our destination. Go to Dean & Huntington's— They will fit and please you; They keep every thing, From stout boots for winter, To light ones for spring.
