WIT AND HUMOR.

"I understand you've gone into farming," said the dentist to his victim. "How large a farm have you?" "Well, I've had four acres for the past week," was the painful response.—Boston Times.

"I wonder why General Sherman said he found no pleasure in kissing a Boston girl?" said a Hub maiden to a gentleman friend, as she adjusted her glasses. "Eye specs so," was his somewhat ambiguous answer.—New York Journal.

The other day David Davis, during an afternoon nap, rolled from a sofa to the floor. The next morning he was not surprised to learn from the papers that there had been an earthquake along the Atlantic coast.—Washington Hatchet.

"I never saw such a woman in all my life," said Bass; "you are never satisfied with anything." "People who knew the man I took for a husband," replied Mrs. B. "think, on the contrary, that I am very easily satisfied."—Boston Transcript.

"Why does a dog chase his tail?" a philosopher asks. We do not think it will add much to the sum of human knowledge to answer this question correctly, but we imagine a dog chases his tail because there's a flea on the end of it.—Somerville Journal.

"I haven't had a bite for two days," pleaded a tramp. "Is it possible?" answered the women, with sympathy. "I'll see what I can do for you in the way of a bite. Here Tigé—Tigé—" The tramp broke a two-dollar gate getting away.—New York Sun.

"I have been going around all day, and now I am tired," remarked an exhausted mother. "You are not like a wheel, are you, ma?" asked Tommy. "Why, little boy?" "You are tired after you go around, but a wheel is tired before it goes around."—New York Star.

The courtesy which marks modern civilization was strikingly exemplified yesterday in the criminal court by judge Williamson referring to the prisoner at the bar in these words: "The gentleman, I understand, has been in some little difficulties before."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

The Dogs is a great source of national wealth but the Buffaloes is nearly extinct. He is knock-terrel in his habits but he dont squeel likes the Mules & pigs.

If you dont give dogs enough to eat he becomes so avaricious that that he will attract human people and on account of his great fidelity to man he is called the King of Beasts.

Our teacher she learnt to talk french at Miss Krautschwanger's Boarded School and she says if you want to make a dog stand on his hind legs in french and make a Bough, now just say O Reservoir Mon Chair.—The Judge.

They had not been married very long, but she had grown cold and listless, so one evening, after she had yawned seventeen consecutive times, he said:

"You seem to be so cold and indifferent, Malvina. Have you forgotten those happy days when I was paying you my addresses?"

"You bet I've not forgotten those happy days before we were married. I never had less than three fellers of an evening around me, paying me attention."

"But, dearest, haven't you got me to pay you attention right now?"

"Yes, I suppose I have. You are doing the best you know how; but you don't flatter yourself that you are equal to three, do you?"

The parties are both well connected, and move in the highest of Austin society.—Siftings

WOLFE AND MONTEALM.

It was toward 10 o'clock, when, from a hillock on the right of the line, Wolfe saw that the crisis was near. The French on the ridge had gathered themselves into three bodies—regulars in the center, regulars and Canadians on the right and left. Two field pieces which had been dragged up the height fired on them with grape-shot, and the troops, rising from the ground, formed to receive them. In a few minutes more they were in motion. They came on rapidly, uttering loud shouts and firing as soon as they were in range. Their ranks, ill-ordered at the best, were further confused by a number of Canadians who had been interspersed among the regulars, and, who, after hastily firing, threw themselves on the ground to reload. The British advanced a few rods; then halted and stood still. When the French were within forty paces, the word of command rang out, and a crash of musketry answered all along the line. The volley was delivered with remarkable precision in the battalions of the center, which had suffered least from the enemy's bullets; the simultaneous explosion was afterwards said by the French officers to have sounded like a cannon shot. Another volley followed, and then a furious clattering fire that lasted but a minute or two.

When the smoke rose a miserable sight was revealed; the ground cumbered with dead and wounded, the advanced masses stopped short and turned into a frantic mob, cursing, shouting, gesticulating. The order was given to charge. Then over the field rose the British cheer, joined with the fierce yell of the Highland sloop. Some of the corps pushed forward with the bayonet; some advanced firing. The clansmen drew their broadswords and dashed on, keen and swift as bloodhounds. At the English right, though the attacking column was broken to pieces, a fire still kept up; chiefly, it seems, by sharpshooters from the bushes and cornfields, where they had lain for an hour or more.

Here Wolfe himself led the charge at the head of the Louisburg Grenadiers. A shot shattered his wrist. He wrapped his handkerchief about it and kept on. Another shot struck him, and he still advanced, when a third lodged in his breast. He staggered and sat on the ground. Lieutenant Brown of the Grenadiers, one Henderson, a volunteer in the same company, and a private soldier, aided by an officer of artillery who ran to join them, carried him in their arms to the rear. He begged them to lay him down. They did so, and asked if he would have a surgeon. "There's no need," he answered, "it's all over with me." A moment after one of them cried out: "They run! See them run!" "Who runs?" Wolfe demanded like a man aroused from sleep. "The enemy, sir. Egad, they give way everywhere." "Go, one of you, to Colonel Burton," returned the dying man; "tell him to march Webb's regiment down to Charles river to cut off their retreat from the bridge." Then, turning on his side, he murmured, "Now, God be praised, I will die in peace," and in a few moments his gallant soul had fled.

Montealm, still on horseback, was borne with the tide of fugitives towards the town. As he approached the walls, a bullet passed through his body. He kept his seat; two soldiers supported him, one on each side, and led his horse through the St. Louis gate. On the open space within, among the excited crowd, were several women, drawn, no doubt, by eagerness to know the result of the fight. One of them recognized him, saw the streaming blood, and shrieked: "Oh, mon Dieu! mon Dieu! le Marquis est tue!" "It's nothing, it's nothing," replied the death-stricken man. "Don't be troubled for me, good, my friends."

The Prominent Factors.

Although many think that farming is a very simple business, one that requires but little, if any, tact, they are most outrageously wrong in their premises. The fact is that farming is quite a complex business. We may divide it into seven prominent factors: Land, labor, horsepower, implements, manure, weather and brains. Capital is not included in this list, because the first five items represent it. The ratio the factors should have to each other is a matter of the first importance. The truth is that the proper adjustment of the several factors among themselves does not receive the attention which it deserves. It is obvious that keeping more horses or hiring more labor than is necessary to cultivate one's farm certainly entails loss. This proposition is readily seen and its force acknowledged, yet it does not seem to be as readily appreciated that having more land than can be cultivated or utilized is quite as bad policy. Labor costs more than all other things about the farm put together. Now, if such an amount of land is cultivated as can be properly attended to by the owner and his family, then all that the farm produces may be counted gain after deducting feed of horses, seed, wear and tear of machinery and agricultural implements. To this must be added the interest of the money invested in land, buildings, implements and horse flesh. It is readily seen that when one has more land than he can thus readily cultivate his expenses increase, and the greater the amount above this the greater the expense of labor; or, in other words, the profit in proportion to the number of acres above this point is less than when just the amount of land is cultivated that can be handled.—Chronicle.
