WIT AND HUMOR.

An Indiana baby, born during a terrible storm, has been named Cyclonia. Its father says the appellation is a misnomer. A cyclone doesn't howl every night.—Norristown Herald.

When a coachman marries his mistress their positions become reversed. Before marriage he drives her; after marriage she drives him—if she is like most women.—Somerville Journal.

In speaking of the girl to whom he was engaged he referred to her as his "financee." You mean your fiancée. It is pronounced fee-ong-say. "I don't care how it is pronounced; this girl is my fiancée. She's worth $30,000.—New York Sun.

Miss Westover, a female-suffrage agitator, who is described as being "one of the prettiest women in England," has delivered 200 addresses in the last six months. Miss Westover appears to be a thing of beauty and a jaw forever.—Chicago Tribune.

"It would never do for you to cast your bread upon the waters, my dear," said the fond young husband. "Why not, Alfred?" asked his pious wife. "Because it is so heavy it would sink," he replied. "Wretch!" she exclaimed, "can you make light of so sacred a subject?" "No, my dear," he replied, "nor can my stomach."

"These candidate fellers," cries an exasperated farmer, "can talk pretty slick about the grandeur and independence of farm life, but I'll wager my last year's straw hat that none of 'em ever tried to convince a pig that it ought to go out of the garden by way of the same hole in the fence that it came in."—Boston Globe.

"And what of this present time?" cried the parson earnestly, smiting the pulpit. "What of this time in which we live? What about the now?" "Now," said the good editor, suddenly aroused from his comfortable slumber, "now is the time to make up clubs." And then the deacons clubbed together and set him out.—Saratoga Journal.

"My dear, look below," said a Harlem man just as he stood on the bridge with his wife, gazing at a tug hauling a line of barges. "Such is life. The tug is the man, working and toiling, while the barges, like women, are—" "I know," interrupted Mrs. G. acridly; the tug does the blowing and the barges bear all the burdens."—Burlington Hawkeye.

They were chums and occupied the same room. One of them, who was dissipated, had been drinking for several days and was apparently very much depressed, drew a revolver from the drawer, looked at it sadly, sighed heavily, shook his head, and said in a low, deep voice: "I have no money. I've pawned almost everything I own. I have but one friend left, my faithful revolver. It will do me a parting service. I'll—" and he lifted the pistol from the table.

"Stop! Hold! Consider what you are going to do. Don't shoot," exclaimed his friend and roommate. "Shoot!" exclaimed the supposed suicide. "Who is thinking of shooting?"

"You said the revolver was going to do you a parting service. Don't be rash!"

"Why you darned fool, so it is going to do a last service. I am going to soak it for a dollar and a half with old Schwartzmeyer, and get some beer for the money," and wrapping up the deadly weapon in a paper he went out on Austin avenue in the direction of the leading pawnbroker's establishment.

Jones—"But can Smith be trusted? Does he know anything about politics?" Brown—"He is politic." Jones—"That's sufficient. To be politic is to know all there is in politics."—[Boston Transcript.
