WIT AND HUMOR.

A land slide is the most significant movement in real estate.—EK

A Boy baby never comes a miss in a well-regulated household.—Chicago Sun.

The richest man in the world lives in China. A sort of China-Astor, as it were.—Boston Star.

It is very funny that when you weigh a fish, the dealer always counts in the scales.—Pertzels Weekly.

A man may successfully paint the town red, but when afterwards he has a brush with a policeman he loses color.

"Pa, how funny this looks in this paper. The printer has got the words all mixed up so there is no sense to it." "No, no, my child. That is a new poem by Tennyson."

When a lady by accident discovers that her photographer has put her picture in his showcase, she goes home and makes a terrible row over it, but doesn't order it to be taken out.

So you don't know what Burdette means by a "macadamized pike," eh? Just you tackle a pike that is about six days caught and eight days cooked, on a railroad lunch-counter, and you will know.

A smart girl that waiter in a Boston boarding-house. When the Sabbath morning comes round she doesn't waste her breath with "beans, fishballs and brown bread."

The Viceroy of India has struck for higher wages. We don't blame him. It must be an awful strain on the nerves to live in a country where a man can't tell whether the snakes in his boots are real or imaginary.

Policeman—"Have you a permit to play here?" Organ Grinder—"No, but it amuses the little ones so much." Policeman—"Then you will have the goodness to accompany me." "Very well, sir, what you wish to sing?"

"Mother," said a little girl, who was engaged in making an apron for her doll. "I believe I will be a Duchess when I grow up." "How do you expect to become a Duchess, my daughter?" "Why, by marrying a Duchman, to be sure," replied the little girl.

Landlady—"Did you like the turkey we had yesterday, Mr. Smith?" Mr. Smith—"Did I like him? Yes, indeed; why, I loved him! I used to think when I was a little child that perhaps, after all, I should live the longest, and the thought made me sad."

"That young man you recommended to me as a clerk hasn't got a particle of business talent," said a Galveston merchant to a friend. No, of course he hasn't. If he had any capacity, he would not have needed my recommendation. I thought you had sense enough to understand that.—Tex as Siftings.

He wanted a position in an Austin bank. The president was satisfied with his credentials, but before engaging him put him through a little civil service cross examination.

"Suppose now, a man was to come in here to deposit twenty dollars in bills, how would you count them?"

"I'd wet my finger and lift up each bill until I got to the last one."

"Why would you not lift up the last one?" "Because there might possibly be one or more bills under it, and if the depositor was to see it he would want it, if the twentieth bill is not lifted up and there should be another bill in the pile the bank makes it, don't you see."

"You will do," said the bank president. "You have been in the business before, but I didn't suppose you knew that trick."—Texas Siftings.

The Farmers' Fix.

It is a curious fact that a people may become poor, and many of them bankrupt, in the midst of plenty; yet the present financial condition of the country verifies the existence of such a paradox. What a relief it would have been if, instead of all wheat, one-half the products of this country consisted in fruits, grapes, wines and stock! Placed in the market at prevailing prices, it would matter but little to the majority of the people if the other half never found a market.

But the situation must be accepted and the worst provided for. What we want now is a change in character of our agriculture. Wheat-growing has monopolized the soil, market, attention and labor of the people long enough. Every farmer is certainly convinced that it is no longer a profitable industry. Even if the foreign markets justified remunerative prices here, the middle men could and would take advantage of the necessity of the people—their sole dependence upon one product—and reap the benefit of the profit.

"There is no use mincing when there is only a mouthful." That other things must and will be planted to the almost total exclusion of wheat, is a fact patent to the dullest comprehension. Then why not begin at once the great work of the future? We are surprised that more extensive preparations are not made for the planting of vines and fruit trees during the winter. The longer it is delayed, the longer it will be before a profit is realized. Some time ago we suggested the winter flooding of lands lying along sloughs which run across the valley from the hills. Thousands of acres of alfalfa could be successful grown in this county should this method of irrigation be resorted to. We insist that an agricultural revolution is inevitable, and he who first enters the field will reap the golden harvest.—Maxwell Star.

A Clock in a Bustle.

Not long since a lady having paid her hotel bill, sent away her boxes on a cab, and sallied forth on foot. No sooner had she departed than the landlord discovered that a clock had disappeared from the mantelpiece of the room which his late lodger had been occupying, though he remembered to have seen it there subsequent to her trunks being dispatched. Convinced that she must be the thief, he rushed out in hot pursuit, and overtaking her he charged her with the robbery and gave her into custody, the lady meanwhile protesting loudly against the indignity offered her, and vowing vengeance against the traducer. She was, however, taken before the Judge and d'Instruction, to whom she resumed her torrent of indignant denial with the extraordinary vocabulary peculiar to the daughters of Gaul. Her indignation was at its height when, lo! 12 o'clock rang forth in clear tones from the region of Madame's improves. The expression of consternation depicted upon the fair pilferer's countenance, together with the appositeness of the quaint phenomenon, was too much for the gravity of the official, who burst into a fit of uncontrollable laughter. Five minutes later a female warder returned the tell-tale timepiece to its owner.—(Pall Mall Gazette.)

An Injured Dog Goes to a Hospital.

Last night the porter heard a dog bark outside the Charing Cross Hospital. He opened it and a rough terrier limped in, squatted on the mat, and held up its right fore paw. The porter, seeing the limb was injured, fetched the house surgeon. The dog followed this gentleman across the hall to the accident room, and, in response to his invitation, jumped on to the chair, and again held forth the injured limb. The house surgeon dressed it, and the dog immediately testified his gratitude by licking his hand, barking loudly. So loudly and persistently did he bark that he had to be put out. He left very reluctantly, hanging about the entrance for quite two hours. To whom the dog belonged or whence he came, is still a mystery.—London Times.

In summer, when the ground is dry, Our wayward minds impressing With what it meet—what we should buy— Light calf skin is a blessing. But, when the rain descends, and mud impedes perambulation, We need a boot both strong and good To reach our destination. Go to Dean & Huntington's— They will fit and please you; They keep every thing, From stout boots for winter, To light ones for spring.
