Value of the Sunflower.

The natural habit of the sunflower (Helianthus annuus) is in tropical America, where, for an annual plant, it grows to an immense size, sometimes being 20 feet high.

It has other values, however, than mere beauty. In India, where there are so many dangerous malarial fevers, are large plantations of sunflowers, which absorb the disease germs floating in the air, thus saving many lives in the same country the leaves are used as feed for cattle, and are said to be very nutritious.

The stalk is also valuable, for large quantities of potash are obtained on burning it. The plant is cultivated to quite an extent in Europe on account of its seeds. These are excellent food for cows and poultry, and from them an oil can be expressed which is scarcely inferior to olive oil.

The so-called "Jerusalem artichoke," (Helianthus tuberosus), a species of sunflower, is a native of Brazil. Like the common sunflower, it thrives in all parts of the habitable globe. This plant is

It is called "Jerusalem," from a corruption of the Italian word "girasole," meaning a sunflower, and "artichoke," from the taste of its tubers resembling the true artichoke, which it is entirely unlike botanically. Tubers grow on the roots which look something like potatoes, but are not so large; from these a delicious soup is made called "Palestina," probably because it contains "Jerusalem."

The more correct name for this plant is the topinamburi, or topinambur—a name given it by the Indians. It grows about ten feet high and has yellow flowers resembling those of the common sunflower, but not quite so large. The tops form an excellent food for cattle, and the tubers also are sometimes used for the same purpose.—Ex.

The Jersey Cattle Boom.

The leading aim of the best breeders now seems to be to breed for the butter record. This is so much the case that the great majority of Jersey cows that have a record below fourteen pounds of butter per week are comparatively cheap, while those with a record of fourteen pounds a week, and upwards to twenty-five and thirty pounds a week, are comparatively high. Those at the top of the scale are sought for and bring forth fabulous prices, or what would be called such a few years ago. Great emphasis is put upon their butter record, and the condition of the tests, as to rations and previous feed of cows, continually grow more precise and satisfactory. The aim is, to show the value of a given animal on specified value of rations, as a machine for making butter, or what the cow will do on grass alone, in flush feed. These tests are made under the supervision of the American Jersey Cattle Club, or under the direction of such witnesses as secure impartiality and give entire confidence in their correctness. These butter records of the Jerseys are quite remarkable, compared with the average yield of common cows.—American Agriculturist.
