OUR LOSS.

I took down the album this morning,
To look on those faces so dear,
Of the sweetest and dearest of children
Where they've been stamped for many a year.

As I look on those childish faces,
And see naught but innocence there,
As they stand in their babyhood races,
With their ringlets of soft brown hair,
My heart beats with quickened pulsation
And a mist comes over my eyes,
For the forms on the pages before me
Are gone, that so dearly I prize.

And I look with many a heart ache
And with many a longing tear:
And wish that I once more could hold them,
And keep back the fast swelling year.
They are gone; but who can tell whither?
Time has carried them far from our sight,
Ah! no more with their childish sorrows,
Will they cling to our knees at night.

But we're not left quite broken hearted,
Though we miss the noise of their feet,
For there comes in their stead this morning,
Great large girls, and large boys, just as sweet.

I know they're the same, yet so different,
And my love for them is just as deep.
Yet who can help missing the little ones,
With their innocent, prattling glee.

Ah yes! I loved the dear little ones,
With a love that never can die;
I love those who have taken their place:
With a love that will reach on high.

I am proud of their strong growing manhood,
And of every thing good that they learn,
And of all their womanly graces,
For my pulses still over them yearn.

As I fondly look, to their dear future,
I pray, that the Savior may keep Their hearts, and their souls, from life's dangers;

At last in his arms may they sleep,
And wake on that bright shore immortal,
Where all who love Jesus shall meet,
And there in an unbroken family,
May we sit, at the Savior's feet.

The Statesman of Salem came out with a mammoth edition on Jan. 7. It was accompanied by a magnificent lithograph of Salem's splendid free bridge. The edition contains 18 pages, and fine pictures of all the state buildings are given.

The Statesman deserves a big share of the credit given its city for the construction of the bridge. It is one of the newest weekly papers in Oregon.

Enfranchising The Indian.

It seems to be conceded that the Indian severalty bill will pass both houses. Experience has proved the practicability of the measure, for when tried the Indian has shown himself capable of settling down and cultivating the land. By removing the present restrictions, giving him a hearing in courts, and a good title to his land, it is hoped that members of the race generally will progress as well as some of the tribes, and individuals, with whom such experiments have been tried. It is further provided that no state or territory shall deny Indians the jurisdiction and equal protection of the law, and that all Indians who have adopted civilized life shall become citizens of the United States.

All intelligent students of the Indian question seem to be pretty well agreed that the allotment of land in severalty will go a long way in taming down the wild men of the plains, and in inducing them to abandon their nomadic life for the arts of peace. From actual knowledge of Indian character however, such as has been displayed to us of the far west, it may be doubted whether the sudden acquisition of the ballot will be a desirable thing for him, before he has proved by something more than his assertion, that he intends adopting civilized life. It may be true, as the New Orleans Times-Democrat claims, that he is started out under more auspicious circumstances, with his farm guaranteed by the government, than was the negro at the south. But the southern negro, accustomed to intimate association with the southern whites, was much better qualified for the suffrage than the Indian who is imbued with the prejudice of generations against civilization. That ultimate citizenship must follow, no one should question, but it is as well that the Indian should first sufficiently prove his adaptability. The allotment of lands in severalty is a most judicious measure and should lead to final enfranchisement. Whether both should be conferred together at once is certainly doubtful.—Daily News.

The funeral of Hon. Wm. Morris at this place on Wednesday was the most largely attended of any heretofore at this place, if we except that of Uncle Tite Willard and it was quite equal to that. The service at the church was conducted by Eld. J. P. Easter and was brief. The Masons, under whose auspices the funeral was had, were out in large numbers, and the services at the grave were grand and impressive. The Royal Arch lodge of which he was a member at Marshfield, was well represented, as were also Chadwick lodge and Beulah chapter, Eastern Star, of this place. Every manifestation was exhibited to show the high esteem in which the deceased was held by the people, and particularly his brethren who knew him best. One sad feature was the absence of the eldest son George who was at Yaquina bay. The death of his father was so sudden, and the sickness, of such short duration, that it was impossible to get word to him in time for him to get here even for the funeral.

A grand masquerade ball will be given at Myrtle Point on Feb. 15, the profits of which will be used in buying a public Organ. Music will be furnished by the Myrtle Point string band, and the tickets will be $1, midnight supper at the Myrtle Point hotel 50c per plate. Persons wishing to attend the ball will be carried at half fare per str. Annie. This affords a rare chance for a good time at small cost.

The thermometer showed 13 degrees below zero at Chicago, and 32 below at St. Paul on the 7th inst.

Dora Items.

Plenty of rain and mud.
Grass is growing fine and stock on the range is looking fine.

The holidays passed very quietly here.

G. W. Stevenson, Henry Holverstott and J. D. Sutton have gone to California.

This part is noted for all sorts of people. One man here says he believes there are 450,000 suns, and that many of the stars we see are suns. He further states that clouds are not necessary to rain; that it can rain as well when there are no clouds in sight as otherwise, but I have never seen it do so.

Dora, Jan. 8.

A Grand Forks (D. T.), dispatch says. A party of pleasure-seekers left the city for a trip over the prairie in a snow boat, invented by Dr. H. W. Wheeler. The party, when starting, presented a novel sight. The boat will accommodate twenty persons, and is comfortably fitted out and wonderfully constructed. The doctor claims it to be the swiftest running boat of the kind yet made. They started from North Third street, and in less than one hour had reached a village twenty-two miles out. They claim that in a good wind it will make thirty miles per hour. It affords considerable pleasure, The doctor is to be congratulated upon his success.

The wonderful popularity attained by Hood's Calendar last year, will be repeated by Hood's Household Calendar-Almanac for 1887, just published. A happier combination of calendar and almanac of beauty and utility, of art and advertising, has seldom been produced. The lovely artist's head lithographed in many delicate colors, will be welcome anywhere, while the pad is a wonder of condensed useful information. Copies may be obtained of the druggists, or by sending six cents in stamps for one copy or ten cents for two, to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Oregon Creameries.

As the creamery system was considerably agitated last spring in our state, and some three or four small creameries were erected there appeared to be a very great want for information pertaining to the various creamery systems now in vogue, the differences of which are worthy the earnest consideration of all interested. As I have had experience in that business, and made it a very careful study for several years, I have been able to gather statistics and information which may be of considerable importance to communities desiring such. As I am interested in this particular business and its success as a new and profitable enterprise in our state, do take this opportunity to inform the public that those making inquiries or seeking information pertaining to this business, by enclosing stamp, I will give the matter my consideration. Other agricultural papers in the state may copy.

What congress must do is to reform the tariff so as to lower excessive duties, drop unnecessary revenues, and cheapen the price of lumber, fuel, clothing, and other great necessities of life. Unless this is done the present congress must confess itself the most incapable body that ever met in the Capitol and unable to apply a plain simple remedy immediately available to avert a serious currency constriction and put a stop to excessive taxation.—Farmer and Dairyman.
