Slander.

I have been lying in the tall grass watching the signs of the times. I find there is no subject under the sun that is or ought to be of more interest to the people of this country than the subject of slander; for if we are not slandering anyone, we can just put it there—some one is slandering us. A great deal of this slandering is done for pastime and is not conducive of very serious consequences; but there is a great deal more that is done for revenge for some fancied wrong; and this is the variety I always like to sit down on. This is the breed that is running at large just now. I have heard so many stories about the loose morals of my friends, that I have come to seriously doubt my own virtue. Why, I heard a story told at the hotel dinner table a few days ago, that was so good we all just filled up on it and let the grub go Scot free. There are some cases where slander does not materially damage the candidate, as in our own case, while in others the effect is very bad. I had a friend once in this state, a young lady of good family, bright and intellectual and pretty. An infamous story was circulated by others and believed by a few more. She took it very hard, became discouraged, dejected, disheartened and lost confidence in the world, and fell to that depth from which so few women ever rise. I saw her a year after. The meeting was by mere accident, but the recognition was mutual. She asked me if I were still a friend to her. "Aye, once a friend always a friend. And so that afternoon we had a long talk over old times, bright days when she was fair as an angel, and spotless as the lillies of the valley. That was the last time I ever saw her. Four years ago in a little mining town away out on the border of Nevada, there was a death-bed scene. There were two attendants and no mourners. This was the end. She said when we parted last, "try and remember me." I do, and I also remember the man that told the first falsehood about her. I remember the two virtuous ladies that carried the news that was afterwards proven to be a lie. I remember her. There is a dark cloud in the sky, but my memory floats a way beyond it, into the spotless ether and glorious halo that once surrounded the life of a friend. I remember her, and oh! there is joy in the remembrance that she is gone where no slander lurks in the folds of the rose, and all the paths of life are lighted by the deathless flame of Omnipotent light. I never believed the story, but saw then as I see now, the same bright gleam beyond the rainbow cloud.

Ed. HERALD:—Thinking the numerous readers of your valuable paper would like a few items from circuit court, we shall submit the following, as your correspondent happened to be present: Empire was very lively this week, two shows and circuit court all at once. We had a Punch and Judy show while Mr. Spurgeon had a small show of his own. We think that Mr. C. of Norway, is thinking of changing his occupation from farmer to Indian agent as he was working up a job of that kind. The first case on docket was J. Coke vs James Laird. The case was decided in favor of the plaintiff. The next case was McCutchen vs W. S. Wheeler. Case decided in favor of McCutchen, plaintiff. The case that created the greatest excitement was the road case, John Barklow vs Coos county. The county was ably defended by the attorneys Hamilton and Matheny and the following witnesses: G. D. Elgin, W. H. Harris, O. J. Grant, Oscar Reed, C. Schroeder, M. P. Whittington, John Berry, John, Cooke, L. Harlocker, G. A. Brown, G. W. Major, H. Hartly, B. C. Shull, D. McNair, and others too numerous to mention. Mr. Barklow has learned four things at court. First, that myrtle land near Myrtle Point is valued at sixteen dollars per acre, and second, that it can be cleared for thirty dollars per acre. Third, that one-quarter of a mile of fence will fence one and one-quarter miles of road on both sides. Fourth, that there was a large lake discovered on his farm during circuit court. We think that it would be a paying investment for the discoverer to put on a large steamer to transport the produce that Mr. Barklow can grow on his little patches of peas and potatoes along the river bank. Rancher.
