Our thanks are due Bro. Bell's folks for favors about the office while here.

The race-horse, Maple wood, died at Rogue river a week ago Thursday. This horse was doubtless the fastest horse owned in this district.

The lecture and singing by the Review force last night were grand. We trust these people will visit us again. We must see to it that they do.

The Prohibition Amendment League of this place meet each alternate Friday evening. The next meeting will be on July 29th.

The millinery store of Mrs. A. L. Olive was moved from Front to Main street and the store and market of Johnson and Stone moved its width north.

Rev. J. R. N. Bell and party left our city a week ago last Monday on the steamer Antelope for Bandon to spend a week rusticiating on the beach, and returned yesterday. They report having had a very pleasant time while there, having beautiful weather during their entire visit.

[Coos Bay News.]

Work is being rapidly pushed on the new mill at North Bend.

Wages in the mills and logging camps on the bay have been increased. No idle men about now.

It is stated that another tug will be built at North Bend, as soon as the one now on the ways there has been launched.

The cannery boats, nets, etc., of the Oregon Southern Packing Co., will be ready for business by the 8th of next month. We hope that the bay fishermen and the company will decide on a price for salmon satisfactory to both, as in case they do not, fishermen will be brought from other places, which will greatly increase the number of boats on the bay, and consequently lessen the catch per man.

The New World caused to be analyzed specimens of whisky, gin, brandy and rum which it purchased from a large number of liquor shops in different parts of the city and the report gives them a "clean bill" so far as adulteration is concerned. There was little or no adulteration formed. The liquor was what it purported to be hence the mission of the people who fight against "adulteration" is gone. But Dr. Willard Parker said years ago that the most injurious part of the liquor was the alcohol itself. It is the alcohol which we fight. It is a poison, and is more and more being so considered by the public at large as well as by scientists.

The supply of water in this place will be shut off during Friday. Don't forget.

DEATH OF MRS. DEAN.

At two o'clock on Friday morning, the 22nd inst., passed away from its earthly tenement as pure a soul as ever winged its way to Heaven. At that hour Emma J. Dean, wife of John A. Dean editor of this paper breathed her last. Unexpected as her death was until a short time previous to the moment of dissolution, it was a terrible blow to her husband and to her grief stricken parents and the members of her own family. Every effort was made to revive the flickering lamp of life but without avail; the inexorable hour had come and amid the prayers and tears of the relatives and friends assembled around her bed, she sank calmly to sleep with a holy sentiment upon her lips.

Mrs. Dean was the daughter of John and Jemima Cartwright of this city, and was born at Watsonville, Cal., March 26th, 1861. She was, therefore, but little over twenty-six years old, and from her bright girlhood and happy womanhood might naturally have looked forward to many years of unshaded existence, had not the angel of death swooped so suddenly down upon her. She had resided here for over twelve years, so that the older inhabitants knew her as a child and with the younger she had grown up in love and in friendship the most loved among them all.

Her health had been failing for some time, and a short time ago she sustained a slight injury from a fall while out riding, but not one of us ever dreamed of so gloomy an event as it is our painful duty to record. Her last illness was of short duration—lasting only one week—and many of her friends who had not learned of its severity were shocked to hear of her demise. The grief, therefore, displayed at her largely-attended funeral was doubly acute and harrowing, and seldom, if ever, has it fallen to the lot of the writer of this obituary to witness such poignant grief at funeral obsequies, as that which was apparent not only in her immediate relatives, but in the vast concourse of sorrowing friends who followed Emma Dean to the grave; friends who knew the deceased intimately and fully recognized her worth.

The funeral procession started from the late home of the deceased shortly after 2 p. m. on Saturday last, and the coffin having been carried into the church, the Rev. Mr. Strang proceeded with the funeral services. His funeral address was solemn and impressive. After alluding to the manifold virtues of the deceased, he especially dwelt upon her having been a true Christian and an ardent member of the Christian church, and above all upon her perfect trust in God and her unflinching hopes of a happy resurrection. He alluded to her religious sentiments expressed shortly before death, and while he prayed his last prayer every cheek was bathed in tears. The assemblage then approached to take one last look at their dead friend before consigning her to her last resting place. She lay as if in a calm sweet sleep, with a happy smile upon her face, and on the lid of the coffin above the heart, was a tablet bearing the inscription, "Our Emma at rest."

She was buried in the new Odd Fellows graveyard adjoining the town, amid the tears and sobs of all present. Peace to her ashes. May the turf lie lightly upon her! Mrs. Dean leaves but one child, a little son not yet old enough to recognize the extent of his loss, but some day in the future the knowledge of her virtues will soften his grief, as it does that of all her friends, and he will exclaim with those who loved her most, "O Grave where is thy victory? O Death, where is thy sting?"

Good Results in Every Case.

Since which time he has used it in his family for all Coughs and Colds with best results. This is the experience of thousands and whose lives have been saved by this Wonderful Discovery. The Outlook Now.

What is good for California is equally as good for Oregon. Says the Examiner: The position of California at this time in respect of her business and material interests appears to be exceptionally favorable. The failures for the first six months of 1887 compared with those for the corresponding term in 1886, for the whole country, show an increase in total liabilities of about $5,000,000, but the whole of this is due to the collapse of the wheat deal in Chicago and the coffee speculation in New York. It appears to be the opinion of the trade in the East that the effect of the first has been to depress the value of wheat 10 to 15 cents per bushel below what would have ruled had trade pursued its ordinary course. Wheat has almost ceased heading for Chicago, while the outward movement is limited only by transportation facilities. Unless values return to a normal standard before the marketing of the new crop, the deal will entail losses to farmers greater than those sustained by the speculators. Meantime the depression is favorable to the Northwestern millers, whose pool has already increased its output 20 per cent, and is talking of starting up the remaining idle mills to full working capacity. In California, on the other hand the price of this staple has been sustained at its prospective value, and the very large profits to farmers thence resulting will not fail to stimulate every department of trade. The fruit crop is heavy and prices profitable to growers. The breakdown of the doctrine and impracticable section of the Interstate Commerce Act has left trade free to follow natural laws, subject however, to the wiser part of that statute, which has abolished improper discriminations between shippers and relieved the railroads of part of the blackmail heretofore levied by office-holders through the free-pass abuse. All these things make for prosperity and development in California. The values of land in general promise to improve under the joint stimulus of profitable farming and immigration. The greater part of the state is threatened by no reaction from a speculative "boom" in values. Money for legitimate use is plenty and not too cheap. In short, it is not clear that any collapse in enterprise on the other side of the continent (should such occur) need affect California in any disastrous way. So far as appears, the worst effect of such an occurrence might be to check the rate of immigration hither. The general stimulus has been felt throughout the Coast. The active lumber trade from the north results in a proportionate return of goods in that direction. The prices ruling in the San Francisco grain market are reflected in those obtainable in Portland, and consequently in the purchasing ability of all Oregon and the Columbia-river country. In short, if the existing state of things can be maintained, California wants no greater boom.
