RALLY TO THE FIGHT.

Who shrinks from marching to the fight?
What coward lags behind?
Who fears to battle for the right
Is false unto mankind!
He's but a knave, and abject slave,
A thing to loath and scorne;
But men like you who dare and do,
Are freemen nobly born!

Why should we bend beneath the yoke
Of men the same as we?
When by a bold, united stroke
Our chains would shattered be.
Arise you, then! from mount and glen,
From city and from plain:
Up men and do, it rests with you
Your freedom to attain!

God made us all from common clay,
The earth to all he gave;
To one "Be lord!" He did not say,
To another, "Be a slave!"
And so we swear, by earth and air,
No more as slaves we'll plod,
But freemen be, on land and sea,
As was ordained by God!

Truth's flag is waving in the air—
The cross of our crusade—
And gallant men and women fair
Beneath it are arrayed!
And they have sworn they'll wave it o'er
A thousand fields of fight!
Till crime be fled, and wrong be dead,
And victor is the right.

An exploring party headed by V. W. Bouton, entered what is known as Chinook cave about 500 feet last Saturday. Perhaps no white men entered it so deep before, because of a superstitious notion that the cave was inhabited by the ghosts of departed Indians. From time immemorial this cave has been the burial place for the tribes living in and about Chinook, but until this exploration it was supposed the bodies were deposited from 50 to 150 feet from the entrance. Last Saturday Mr. Bouton, and Messrs Jos, and Hubert Petit found a wall to the cave about 150 feet from the entrance, and by digging a passage way through it, met with no obstacle to penetrating a farther distance of abou. 350 feet. In this chamber their trouble was rewarded by finding large deposts of Indian relics, including arrow heads, beads, etc., in great profusion. Mr. B. thinks there is an opposite opening to the cave, and proposes at some future day to renew his explorations. In course of time these caves will become popular amongst tourists and sight seers.—Astoria Daily Pioneer,

A Wonderful Clock.

Prof. F O. Tucker, the famous inventor of Hartford, Conn., is in town. His latest invention is an electric clock for horse races. It is a large faced clock in front of the judges' stand, so as to be plainly seen from the grand stand. When the judge gives the word go he presses an electric button and the clock immediately starts. When the foremost horse reaches the wire it breaks the circuit and the clock stops while at the same instant an instantaneous photograph is taken showing wire position of horses doing away with disputes as to dead heats. Mr. Tucker also took some fine instantaneous views in the village.—Norway Advertiser.

Government Control.

Washington, Oct. 14.—Quite a large proportion of the Government telegraphing to and from this city was done over the Baltimore & Ohio wires. The absorption of that Company by the Western Union leaves Mackay's United lines and Postal lines the only competing wires, and will probably lend force to the movement in the next Congress to establish some sort of Government controll over the telegraph service. It has been suggested that an effort will be made to extend the principles of the Interstate Commerce law to telegraph communication.

British Ship Wrecked

London, Oct 14.—The British ship Monarch, Captain Corbett, from Manilla, Aug. 30th, for New York, has been lost on the Mindoro island. The captain and three of the crew named Drews, Redford and Crupp were drowned. The remainder have arrived at Manilla.

Washington Letter.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, Oct. 11, 1887.

Thursday, Oct. 6, 1887, was a real red-letter day in the eventful history of the Capital of the United States, and it will long be a most glorious anniversary in its annals, for it was the time set apart for the popular demonstration in honor of Alexander R. Shepherd, the former Governor of the District of Columbia, and the builder of Washington, in the opinion of thousands of Washingtonians, many of whom regard their greatest citizen—who after all is common clay—as a sort of superior being. Thousands—a great multitude—thronged Pennsylvania avenue and adjoining streets amid the boom of cannon, the flash of torch lights, and lurid glare of fireworks, the blare of brass bands, and the tramp of the long line of footmen and horsemen, citizens and soldiers, preceded by several hundred bycyclists, bearing chinese lanterns. All along the route the houses were adorned with the stars and stripes and all Washington seemed to have turned out to give a more than royal greeting to the man it delights to honor. If this splendid popular pageant had been paid to a successful military hero returning from the pomp and triumph of bloody fields, or to a statesman crowned with the laurels of civic renown, it would not have been in the least wonderful; that Mr. Shepherd, simply a private citizen without power to favor or reward, should thus spontaneously receive this magnificent tribute and homage from the populace of his native city is unique, and without a single parallel in the United States; if indeed, not that of the whole world as well. And if Republics are ungrateful, the Capital of the greatest of Republics is surely not so.

The work on the fine State, War and Navy Department building, which is pronounced the grandest public structure in the Federal city is nearing completion, and will, it is expected, be ready for occupation early next January.

The constant and rapid growth of our great Government departments—more particularly the Patent and Pension offices—keep pace with the progress and upbuilding the Interior Department domiciled outside of the main building, and it is the purpose of the authorities to remove the general Land Office from thence to the Pension Office sometime within the next year, thus making room for such of the smaller bureaus as are crowded out and saving the Government huge rental.

Secretary Fairchild has issued a circular to the custom officials, urging their adoption of economic methods in the collection of custom duties, in view of the decreased appropriations for the purpose in question.

The controller of the currency has directed all national banks to prepare statements, showing the exact condition of their affairs at the close of business on Oct. 5, 1887—the object in doing so being obviously to guard against fraud and deception in these degenerate days.

The report of the Postoffice Department for the month of August, in the matter of selling postage stamps, makes a very gratifying exhibit—showing, as it does, that in seventy six first class postoffices, there was a gain of more than twelve per cent over the sales of the previous month.

Secretary Lamar is absorbed in making his annual report, which will be more voluminous than usual—dealing largely with the affairs of the Indians and lands and railroads.

The report of commisioner of Patents Hall to the Secretary of the Interior shows that the defalcation of Bacon, late financial clerk of the Patent office, is $30,000. His bond was only $10,000, and there is a question whether or not his bondsmen will be liable for more than that amount.

The time fixed has expired without the Government being able to secure the fourteen million in four and four and a half per cent bonds called for by the September circular—the purchase only amounting to $13,376,850.

Among the many pecepts for the abolition of poverty showered upon the poor man the admonition to live within his income is most frequently heard. There are two sides to this precept, To live within a limit pre-supposes an area large enough to hold one. If a man needs a square foot of ground to stand upon how is he to stand within the limit of that space? So with one's income. If a man has an income of one dollar per day and it will not subdivide into portions to meet the several demands made upon it, how is the man to live within it? This is the question. The proportion or ration between possesion and expenditure is never regulated by the bulk of the former but by the demands upon the latter. And if it is wrong to expend beyond one's income it is certainly wrong to transgress on the other side. Wealth owes a duty to the world, and to the source from whence it flows. It has no right to hoard beyond the dictates of necessity and prudence. Culture brings of it increased claims upon money, but if men of wealth were tutored to carry themselves according to their income there would be fewer households in straightened circumstances.

Mathew Arnold says, "the poor are very much as the rich make them. The lower strata of society will not be rightly adjusted until the upper layers are rightly adjusted and the upper strata will not be rightly adjusted until wealth is regarded by its possessor as something to be hoarded beyond needs and that poverty, sickness and misfortune have so many claims upon it.—Journal of United Labor.
