DUNHAM'S CAMP.

A BUSY HIVE OF INDUSTRY.

A HERALD Reporter's Glowing
Picture of a Model Camp—Other Notes.

We left Coquille City during a deluge of rain, and soon found ourselves navigating the dark brown waters of Beaver slough. Two hours of hard pulling on the part of the oarsmen, and of patient, though not silent, suffering on the part of the passengers, brought our frail craft to the landing at Coaledo. As we reached terra firma every face brightened and every heart rejoiced, that we had at last escaped the dismal waste of brush and water. A short run by rail brought us to the residence of Mr. Dunham, where a cheerful coal fire quickened our circulation, and restored our half suspended animation; and the genial hospitality extended by Mr. Dunham and family thawed our chilled spirits, and restored us to our usual good humor.

Next day we spent very pleasantly in wandering over timber and grass land belonging to Mr. Dunham, and admiring the various improvements. We found so many things interesting us, and which would probably be of interest to many readers of the HERALD, that we cannot forbear a description of them more or less in detail.

Owing to the peculiar topography of Coos county, the tourist, going over the usual line of travel, gets but a faint idea of the extent and variety of her resources, or of the number of her inhabitants. Ask the average tourist, who has made the trip from Coquille City to Marshfield by stage, what he saw between Coaledo and King's Landing, and he will probably answer: "Of nothing but low marshes, and steep rugged hills." He will be surprised if you inform him that at the base of one of these hills, just out of view, and yet scarcely more than half a mile distant from the stage line, nestles a little valley, in which is located one of the busiest hives of industry in the county. Yet such is the case; for here, close to the road, and yet out of view, is located the Dunham logging camp, which probably gives employment to more men, during the logging season, than any other camp in the county.

THE CAMP

The camp, on first sight, gives the visitor the impression of a country village, with its numerous residences and other buildings. The residences of the married employes have a particularly homelike air, with their patch of garden, then domestic animals, fowls, etc.

Mr. Dunham, instead of building a large bunkalation for the sleeping quarters of all the single men, has built several smaller houses; these houses are partitioned into rooms which are warmly papered and well lighted by windows. By this arrangement more privacy is secured than is possible in a bunkalation, and more latitude is allowed for the exercise of individual peculiarities. If one man wishes to sit up late and read he can do so without annoying his companions, and if another desires to retire at an early hour he can do so without fear of having his slumber disturbed. This is a feature of the camp which we would recommend to the attention of loggers throughout the county, and hope for its adoption, especially by men who are starting new camps. The old bunkalation, in which men are herded together, is a disgrace to the age in which we live, is barbarous—even cruel, and should be abolished on humanitarian grounds if on no other.

The cookhouse is 24x90 feet in size and contains dining room, kitchen, pantry and storeroom. The dining room has two tables with a capacity of twenty-five men to each table. The kitchen is a model of neatness, and extensively furnished with all the requisite culinary utensils. In one end of the building are a couple of very comfortably furnished rooms, for the accommodations of Mr. Dunham and members of his family when they have occasion to stay over-night at the camp. A particularly noteworthy feature of the building is a covered veranda running its entire length, and communicating with various storehouses in the rear. Doors open from this veranda into the various parts of the building, so that a person is enabled to reach any apartment without passing through the other; the cook also is thus enabled to reach the various store rooms at any time without danger of being troubled by rain or mud.

A garden of about two acres supplies the camp with that promoter of good health,—an abundance of fresh vegetables. Here may be found growing side by side the luscious strawberry, the mammoth squash and the deadly cucumber with its suggestions of cholera morbus; in short, the variety is only equalled by the abundance, and both are equal to any demand that may be made upon them.

One of the most conspicuous buildings in the camp is the barn. Built on an eminence which insures good drainage, it is sixty-eight feet square and has stalls for the stabling of twenty yoke of oxen. The interior arrangements are admirable, cleanliness and order prevailing everywhere. In one end of the building is a room partitioned off, and specially fitted up, for the accommodation of the teamsters. The upper portion of the building is divided into two parts, one for the storing of hay, the other for the storing of tools. In the latter part we counted eighteen crosscut saws, each hanging in its place bright and shining, without a speck of rust, and the condition of the various other tools was up to the same standard.

Attached to one end of the barn is a shed, with planked floor where the stock are watered. A trough runs almost the entire length of the shed, and water is conveyed to it through a pipe from a spring on the hillside. Water is also conveyed to the cook house and other buildings in this way. The nature is daily wheeled off to a distance and not allowed to accumulate as is so often the case around such buildings.

LOGGING

Messrs. Dunham, Dean & Co. own a tract of 2000 acres on which Mr. Dunham is logging at present. Here fifty men are employed, three teams run and about five million feet of timber logged off annually. Last winter Mr. Dunham put in a chute three quarters of a mile long and costing upwards of $5000. Logs are started at the head of the chute, run its entire length at an astonishing velocity, and bring up on the landing. Here the logs are rolled on trucks and hauled by locomotive to the boom at Isthmus slough.

A steam engine is used for yarding out the timber. And logs within a radius of several hundred yards can thus be pulled onto the skid road, ready for the oxen to haul it to the head of the chute.

This is the only engine used for this purpose in the county. Mr. Dunham is to be complimented as the first to introduce that progressive system of logging, which prevails in the redwoods, and which we hope to see more generally adopted throughout this county.

HILL LAND

We have often heard it remarked, by farmers and others, that the hill lands throughout this county were worthless. A visit to the property of Mr. Dunham will soon disabuse the mind of that idea. Here every thing has been logged off that would pay, then the tops and brush burned and the lands seeded to grass and clover. The stock are kept off the seeded land for the first year to give the grass a good start, after which it is able to take care of itself. This hill land grazes over two hundred head of stock, and yet at present writing, red clover may be found growing luxuriantly on the tops of the steepest hills. Those who have visited the home of Mr. Dunham may have seen a thrifty orchard growing on similar land. Some of the peach trees in this orchard, though fourteen years old, are still strong and vigorous, and produce a fruit equal in size and flavor to those imported from California.

MILL AND SHOPS

Mr. Dunham's mill has a capacity of about five thousand feet, but is run only for his own use and to supply local orders. Most people in passing over the isthmus have seen the mill, but few know that attached to it is one of the most complete machine shops in the county. Here is a lathe and drill run by a steam engine specially placed in the shop for the purpose, also a complete set of dies of various sizes and all the tools necessary to the running of a first-class machine shop.

The blacksmith shop is also very complete in its equipments, and only the best Swedish iron is used. Mr. Dunham finds that the extra cost of this iron is more than compensated for by the increased strength and durability of the tools, dogs and other articles forged from it. While here we paid a visit to the storehouse. A noticeable feature of this place, and one that bears strong testimony to the industry of Mrs. Dunham, is the great number of jars, filled with fruits and berries, and stowed away on dark shelves, for future consumption. Some day they shall come forth from their dark hiding place to tickle the palate with their delicious flavors; then shall we mourn our absence!

COAL

Mr. Dunham has been mining coal for years, and has spent several hundred dollars in prospecting. He has discovered thirteen veins, five of which he has worked. The coal is lignite, and of so superior quality, that we could hardly believe, at first, that it was not imported. We have had some experience in testing eastern coals, both for locomotives and stoves, and will unhesitatingly say that we think the coal mined by Mr. Dunham, will compare favorably with any soft coal we have seen.

It may not be quite as lasting as some coal but this is more than compensated for by its other good qualities. It burns with a bright, clear flame does not clinker, and is finally reduced to ashes as fine and light as that of wood. It does not slack by handling like some other coals, and its freedom from dust is another desirable quality. It is a good steam coal; but above qualities will recommend it particularly for domestic purposes, and will some day make it a favorite with the housewife.

We would particularly call the attention of croakers, who can see nothing bright in the future of this county, to the vast amount of wealth that lies buried beneath her surface, in this and other districts, in the form of coal; and let them estimate if they can the thousand, aye millions, of dollars she will one day realize from it, when the enterprise of the capitalist, and the labor of the miner, combine to bring it to the surface.

TRANSPORTATION

The only mode of travel, between the Coquille river, and Coos bay, in the winter time, is by way of Beaver slough and the isthmus. The antiquated mode of travel and transportation which exists on this route is a disgrace to the county, and this is particularly applicable to the Beaver slough portion of it. There is no man or woman in the county, who has made the trip once, who does not dread a repetition of it, or who will willingly undertake it again if they can avoid it. Many an immigrant, coming to the Coquille by this route, has imbibed his first disagreeable impressions of the country, while struggling through the tangled brush and slimy waters of Beaver slough; and after the next steamer has carried him away, to cast his lot, and invest his money, in a more progressive district. Many immigrants of means (a class much needed in this county) first reached the Coquille by the winter route; and they will tell you that their first impression of the county, thus received, was anything but flattering.

Mr. Dunham has for years, and under very discouraging circumstances, operated the present route. Many residents of the county, who consider the fares charged exorbitant, and who believe that the operating of the route has been a source of considerable revenue to Mr. Dunham, will be surprised to learn that he has for years operated it at an actual loss. The fact is, Mr. Dunham has kept the route open, at a loss to himself, solely for the accommodation of the Coos county public, and the promotion of the county's interest; and if any desire a confirmation of this statement, he will be pleased to show the books kept during the time of operations. Mr. Dunham has no ambition to pose as a philanthropist, but thinks that it is time his position in this matter was viewed in a true light. He does not make this statement to gain the public praise but rather to show the unfairness of its growth.

The establishment of a comfortable winter route, between the Coquille river and Coos bay, is a matter that concerns every resident of the county, and each should take an interest in it. Beaver slough has been declared a public thoroughfare, and some money has been appropriated for its improvement, but so small was the amount that it was not even sufficient to pay the expense of clearing the hanging brush off the banks. Mr. Dunham suggests, that it would pay the county to make Beaver slough navigable for a small steamer, from its mouth to the landing; a good plank road built from here to Hall's landing, a distance of only a mile, would give connection with the Marshfield steamer. Some may suggest that a railroad will soon connect the bay and river; but if so, it would probably be less exorbitant in its charges if it had a good county thoroughfare to compete with. We would invite a free and full discussion of this subject, and believe that the columns of the HERALD will be open to such a discussion, so long as it is conducted without acrimony or the importation of personalities.

We take this occasion of thanking Mr. Dunham and the members of his family for information imparted, and courtesy and hospitality extended to us on our trip; and our visit to the Isthmus, shall long be remembered, as one of our pleasantest and most enjoyable experiences.

IF A BODY MEET A BODY

The result is a collision, whether "coming thro' the eye," or not. Life is full of collisions. We are constantly colliding with some body or something. If it isn't with our neighbors it is with some dread disease that "knocks us off the track," and perhaps disables us for life. Women especially seem to have less the benefit of more collisions and afflictions than mankind. In all cases of nervousness, bearing-down sensations, tenderness, periodical pains, sick headache, congestion, inflammation, or irritation and all female irregularities, and "weaknesses," Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to the rescue of women as no other medicine does. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it will be refunded. See guarantee on bottle wrapper.
