Mr. Bryan's Sense of Justice Is Intelligent and Humane.

ED. HERALD: The Oregonian of April 8th speaks of Bryan as being concerned about the fact of money being placed as master and man the slave; and they emphasized in heavy type the statement that Bryan did not speak of "Puerto Rico for the sake of justice, or the abolition of tariff abuses for the sake of justice, or the reform of the army for the sake of justice, or the perfection of our money system by what is right and just, or the correction of our tariff or taxation systems by what is right and just." We are to infer that Bryan has but very poor ideas of justice, as he is so greatly interested in humanity, and would like to see humanity in shape to enjoy some of the blessings that our country is supposed to vouchsafe to its humblest citizens rather than to see the men who control our monetary system have everything their own sweet way. From what they say it is Bryan's idea that where there are great aggregations of wealth concentrated into the hands of the few it should be more evenly divided, and the protection the law throws around such great masses of wealth should be thrown down; and they say of it, "It is the spirit that menaces established order all over Europe today. It is the spirit that gave Paris its commune, Homestead its horrors, Chicago its riots. It may not seem formidable today, but formidable it may easily become the next time that panic strikes us and hunger and want takes the place of prosperity and employment."

There is but the one conclusion to be drawn, and that is that Bryan "when hunger and want takes the place of prosperity" will be looking after the interest of the poor people, while the Oregonian and its gold-standard patriots will be looking alone for the safety of the great aggregations of wealth.

Lack of employment and haggard, hungry wives and starving children produce desperate men; and desperate men produced the Paris commune. Such should be looked after and bull-pens prepared for them in time, so that justice may be secured to the large accumulation of wealth. The crane thought it was justice that he should swallow the fish, but the fish thought otherwise; but what rights has the fish, anyway? The ideas of justice vary very often, and look different from different standpoints, and the cry of a hungry child may pull down on the great balance beam of justice as heavy as the millionaires tons of gold.

Plan to Reduce Production and Increase Prices

Minneapolis, April 13.—The Journal says: "All the farmers of the world, are in a sort of international trust to restrict the production of wheat and raise prices, is the plan which it is hoped to carry into effect at the International Agricultural Conference in Paris. July 9th to 16th. It is proposed to ask the farmers of the world to reduce their wheat output by 20 per cent, and not to sell a bushel for less than $1.

"Good-by, father," said young Josh Medders, as he started for the city. "Good-by, my son," replied the old man, "and don't forget that, while fortune is pretty certain to knock at every man's door, she has never been known to meet him at the depot with a gold brick in her hand."

LETTER FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

Brett Clark Writes Another Long and Interesting Epistle.

CARCAR, Island of Cebu, Philippine Islands, January 30, 1900

My Dear Sister and Family: As it has been some time since I have written you, I will write again and will hereafter try and write at least once a month, so after you receive this you can look for a letter about every month unless the mails fail to leave regularly. As you know, we are 40 miles from Cebu, and that is the nearest place the mail boats from the states come, and as Cebu is our base of supplies, the quartermaster's launch brings us supplies and the mail for this company. Sometimes she comes every five days, but the last time she was here was the 10th of this month, and she brought us rations to last until February 10th, and so we will not get any mail or have a chance to send any off until that date.

Everything is going along about the same as it was when I last wrote. Our troops are meeting with success all over the archipeligo, and the insurgents are pretty badly demoralized and scattered into the mountains, and indications point to a speedy conclusion of the insurrection. The insurgents appear to be rapidly losing heart, and many are deserting the ranks and placing themselves under American protection. The deserters say they are almost naked, are never paid anything and get very little to eat, and when a Filipino says he is not getting enough to eat, conditions must be very bad, for they will eat nearly anything that inhabits the earth, sea or sky, with the exception of ants, and I think they would eat them rather than work. No matter where they are they can find something to eat. When they are in the interior they live on fruit and various roots, and when near the coast they can get plenty to eat. All kinds of shell-fish abound on the coast. Oysters are found in great plenty, but as no care is taken of the beds they are very small and of an inferior quality. There is one kind of a shell-fish here that reaches an enormous size. I have seen them as large as a common washtub. A great many pearl oysters are found among the southern islands around the Jolo archipelago, but they are scarce here, although some few are found. The pearl oyster shell is a flat shell and are generally about ten inches in diameter and of an oblong shape. The shell itself is valuable, being worth from 15 to 25 cents per pound. And so if no pearls are found, the shells are worth diving for. The natives are employed to dive for the shells and are marvels of endurance. They will dive in 50 and 60 feet of water, and stay under for three and four minutes at a time. Their diving equipment consists of a knife about sixteen inches in length, and a bamboo basket tied to their left wrist. The knife is to defend themselves from the attack of sharks and the much-dreaded octupus or devil fish, and to cut the shells from their rocky bed. The basket is to carry the shells in. The pearl is found embeded in the strong muscles of the fish. But all shells do not have pearls in them, but on the contrary, sometimes a hundred shells will be opened without finding a single pearl. But as the divers are cheap and the shells are valuable, pearl fishing is a profitable business even if no pearls are found. Chinese are the pearl merchants and are sure to ask as much for a pearl as a jeweler would in the United States.

Some places along the coast the land is very flat, and when the tide is out vast mudflats are left exposed. These mudflats are covered with the mangrove tree. This tree always has the appearance of being washed out and nearly ready to topple over, and stands up clear of the ground on a mass of roots. When the tide comes in it covers the roots and gives the tree the appearance of sitting on the water, the branches spreading out on the surface of the water. The roots of this tree are covered with oysters, and at low tide the native women come down in droves to get them. They will wade around in the mud kneedeep for hours at a time to get them, not wearing clothing enough to flag a handcar; and where there are no mudflats there will be the finest sand beaches one could imagine. And what a place to bathe, they are? The water is always warm, of course, and the water comes in in long rolls. When we want to go in bathing we have to wear a hat to keep the sun from burning our heads, and then what fun it is. One can stay in the water for hours and not feel any ill effects from it.

The natives along the coast nearly live in the water. They eat anything they find in the sea. There is a kind of a snake or eel found in the bay here, which is sometimes caught, ten and twelve feet in length. The natives say they are fine eating, but I would not want to try one, they look too much like a snake for my stomach. Then there is a salt-water leach that attains the length of 14 or 16 inches, and are about half an inch broad and covered with hair or bristles. These, the natives say, are something great. It makes one's flesh creep to look at one, let alone eat it. There is a funny little crab here that has no shell of its own, and so picks up any shell it finds lying around loose and crawls into it. The effect is often quite ludicrous. Then there is another crab that has only one claw, and this about four times as long as the body of the crab. When he feeds himself it puts one in mind of a derrick. When he wishes to crawl he folds his claw up along his side as a chicken does its wing, and goes sideways at quite a rapid gait. The waters abound with swordfish. I have seen them with swords four feet in length.

Great quantities of cobra are prepared here. This is the dried meat of cocoanuts, which is shipped to Hong Kong and there the oil is pressed out of it and the oil is shipped to the islands. Here it is put to all kinds of uses. It is used for illuminating, for hair oil (no woman or dandy thinks they are complete unless their hair is saturated with it), and for cooking as we use lard. However, it is not a very good substitute for lard according to my taste. We soldiers use it for our guns and it is excellent for that. Abaca (or hemp) is another great product. This is made from the fiber of a plant that greatly resembles the brake that grows on the Oregon hills; however it is a great deal larger, often attaining the height of 20 feet and more. And as a matter of course it is prepared in the hardest and slowest way possible. The stalks are cut and allowed to lay in the water until they rot, then they are beaten by hand with wooden mallets until the fibres are separated from the pulp. Then they are picked out and washed and finally are twisted up like a huge hank of yarn and are then ready for shipment. Some of them make it up into cordage, twisting it by hand, and they make it very good. It is about the best cordage I have ever seen. This is how the famous manila cordage of commerce is produced. The work is nearly all done by women and children. In fact nearly all the work in the islands is done by the women. They, like the Indian squaw, are the drudges.

Bananas are just getting ripe now and are very cheap—about one cent a dozen. Bananas here are excellent, about the best I ever ate.

The bread-fruit grows in great abundance. This fruit looks a great deal like an over-grown hedgeapple. It is about the size of a common pail. The natives roast it before a fire, then cut it open and eat the inside. It neither looks nor tastes anything like bread, but has a sweet, sickening taste. Some of the boys eat it, but I cannot stomach it.

The mango looks and tastes much like a pawpaw; is about the same size and color, but only has one seed. According to my opinion the pineapple is the best fruit that grows here, and they are something excellent and attain to large size. Pina silk is produced from the fiber of the pineapple stalk. This is prepared in much the same way as hemp is, and then wove by hand on crude looms. Nearly every household can boast a loom. Cloth is also made from the fibre of cocoanut husks and banana stalks. This cocoanut and banana cloth is woven very loosely and is mostly used by the laboring class for clothing.

I think they have sawmills on Luzon island, but here all the lumber that is used is whipsawed in the mountains and hauled in on ox-carts. These carts are clumsy affairs; the wheels are made of pieces sawed from the end of a log, generally mahogany, and the body mahogany and bamboo.

The buffalo seems to be more of a water than land animal. They can't live unless they have water to wallow in like a hog. When we went into the mountains after the insurgents we took some buffalo along to haul our cannon, but when we left the rice fields and mud, and started up the hills, they soon gave out and fell down and died. I think they would be a great thing for Coos county in winter, for mud never gets too deep or thick for them to get through; the deeper it is the better they seem to like it. They could drag an Oregon wagon over the mud without any trouble. It is almost impossible to drown them, so they could graze all winter on the marshes and come out fat in the spring. The cows are never milked and such a thing as butter or milk (with the exception of goat's milk) is unknown. Farmers all keep and milk goats the same as farmers in the states do cows. I have tried to drink the milk, but have not found it much to my taste. When we are in the field we live mostly on hardtack, bacon and coffee, but when we are in quarters we live very well, have plenty of all kinds

Hetty Green Grows Gossipy.

Mrs. Hetty Green, the famous woman millionaire, is again in Boston, consulting lawyers. In an interview she expressed some candid opinions about lawyers, doctors and poor relatives—her own in particular—and discussed the Molineux case, the Paris exposition and Jay Gould's claim to fame.

She said she was tired of lawyers, and believes that when a man cheats another too bad the Texas policy should be pursued—shoot off a leg or two, or blood-letting.

"I propose to live as long as I can," she said further. "I've been sick, and they tried to frighten me into thinking I had pneumonia. There are 700 relatives of mine now waiting for me to die, but I don't intend to die right away."

After declaring that she wouldn't go to the Paris exposition for anything in the world she switched onto the Molineux case. She called the Union Club of New York a poor one, and said unrepeatable things about Mrs. Roland Molineux and the 10,000 too many degenerate women in New York.

"It makes me laugh," she said, "to think of Jay Gould's name being inscribed on a roll of honor in the Temple of Fame. Why, they can't do that if they try. The people whom Jay Gould has fleeced would tear it down and all the other names would want to be draped in crepe. Mrs. Russell Sage makes me tired by the way she is putting Helen Gould forward and talking to her about 'her dear father.' If Helen ever wakes up to know what kind of a man her father was among men it will be a sad day for her."

Remarkable Cure of Rheumatism.
KENNA, Jackson Co., W. Va.
About three years ago my wife had an attack of rheumatism which confined her to her bed for over a month and rendered her unable to walk a step without assistance, her limbs being swollen to double their normal size. Mr. S. Maddox insisted on my using Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I purchased a fifty-cent bottle and used it according to the directions and the next morning she walked to breakfast without assistance in any manner and she has not had a similar attack since.—A. B. STYLE No. 55. "ARLINGTON."

The Head of the "Arlington" swings on patent socket hinges, firmly held down by a thumb screw. Strong, substantial, neat and handsome in design, and beautifully ornamented in gold. Bed plate has rounded corners and is inlaid or countersunk, making it flush with top of table. Highest Arm—Space under the arm is 5½ inches high and 9 inches long. This will admit the largest skirts, and even quilts. It is Self-Threading—Absolutely no holes to put thread through except eye of needle. Shuttle is cylinder, open on end, entirely self-threading, easy to put in or take out; bobbin holds a large amount of thread. Stitch Regulator is on the bed of the machine, beneath the bobbin winder, and has a scale showing the number of stitches to the inch, and can be changed from 8 to 32 stitches to the inch. Feed is double and extends on both sides of needle; never fails to take goods through; never stops at seams; movement is positive; no springs to break and get out of order; can be raised and lowered at will. Automatic Bobbin Winder—For filling the bobbin automatically and perfectly smooth without holding the thread. Machine does not run while winding bobbin. Light Running—Machine is easy to run, does not fatigue the operator, makes little noise and sews rapidly. Stitch is a double lock stitch, the same on both sides, will not ravel, and can be changed without stopping the machine. Tension is a flat spring tension, and will admit thread from 8 to 150 spool cotton without changing. Never gets out of order. The Needle is a straight, self-setting needle, flat on one side, and cannot be put in wrong. Needle Bar is round, made of case-hardened steel, with oil cup at the bottom to prevent oil from getting on the goods. Adjustable Bearings—All bearings are case-hardened steel and easily adjusted with a screw driver. All lost motion can be taken up, and the machine will last a lifetime. Attachments—Each machine is furnished with necessary tools and accessories, and in addition we furnish an extra set of attachments in a velvet lined metal box, free of charge, as follows: One ruffler and gatherer, one binder, one shirring plate, one set of four hemmers, different widths up to ⅞ of an inch, one tucker, one under braider, one short or attachment foot, and one thread cutter. Woodwork of finest quality oak or walnut, gothic cover and drawers, nickel-plated rings to drawers, dress guards to wheel, and device for replacing belt.
