Advertising Oregon.

The work of encouraging immigration to Oregon is interesting the commercial bodies of Portland. Some time ago the Chamber of Commerce appointed a standing committee on advertising and instructed it to investigate and suggest a plan of action. Now comes the Board of trade with a proposal to extend its organization throughout the state, and by means of subboards working in harmony with the central body at Portland to advertise Oregon's resources, promote immigration and encourage manufacturing enterprises. The Manufacturers' Association also recognizes the urgent need of missionery work, and there is talk of sending an agent to the east to make known the industrial capabilities of the state.

There is too much division of labor in this business of advertising Oregon. If the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade and the Manufacturers Association all undertake it, with the commercial and push clubs of coast and interior towns, working on their own lines, there is likely to be confusion and waste of energy. If the Board of Trade sets up a permanent exhibit in the Union Station in opposition to the Chamber of Commerce exhibit on Washington street, the intending settler will doubtless find plenty to interest him, but the results achieved would be better still if the two shows were under one roof. The thing to do in this matter of advertising Oregon is for the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade, the Manufacturers' Association and all other kindred bodies to combine for a united effort to accomplish something. The name of such a body is not of special importance. It might be called the State Board of Trade, or any other name, but it should represent all the state and be strong enough to push Oregon to the front. There is no gainsaying the need of a central body. Neither the Chamber of Commerce nor the Board of Trade nor the Manufacturers' Association is able to supply the information about Oregon asked in letters which are received every day from intending settlers and investors.

If the several organizations interested in encouraging settlers and industraial development would consolidate for immigration work, it ought not to be difficult to raise a large fund to pay for printing and distributing literature. The right kind of effort in the right quarter would be productive of much good. What Oregon wants is people of means—intelligent agriculturists for the farms, orchards and dairies, and men of capital to build factories and give employment to labor. If we will only encourage manufacturing industries to utilize our raw materials, we shall have established an agency for immigration more effective than a legion of agents and a million pieces of literature.

Since the tug Triumph has been taken charge of by Captain C. H. Butler, of this place, and Chief Engineer Barrows, of Bandon, the vessel is receiving a thorough overhauling as well as one important additional improvement, in the way of a steam gear for hauling in the hauser. This has always been a tedious and laborious task, and took up valuable time, it being impossible to haul this large line in by hand while the tug was under speed. This gear consists of a small winding engine located in the forward part of the house, the spool or which protrudes over the deck of the port quarter, and the throttle is arranged so as to be managed from the out side so the machine is entirely under the management of the deckhand, and this large and unwieldly line can be taken on board of the tug while she is under full speed and without the aid or assistance of the Captain or engineer. This will make a difference of at least one vessel to the tide in the tug's towing capacity.

Their promptness and their pleasant effects make DeWitt's Little Early Risers most popular little pills wherever they are known. They are simply perfect for liver and bowel troubles. R. S. Knowlton.

TRIXIE TRICE.

An Oregon City dispatch of March 28th says: "Guy Clark recently acquired possession of the pilot wheel of the steamer Brother Jonathan, which went ashore at Crescent City, Cal., July 30, 1865. Two hundred and seventy-five persons lost their lives, while 17 made their way to shore in a small boat. The Brother Jonathan made regular trips to San Francisco, until the vessel was wrecked. Young Clark recently visited his father, who is manager of the Bandon Woolen mills, and while there made a trip to Crescent City, where he purchased the wheel on account of its value as a relic. The wheel has been used to ornament the interior of a saloon for 30 years, the owner refusing to sell it for any consideration, but after his death, a daughter was induced to part with it."

Charles Gressen, representing the W. W. Kimball Co., and Lakeside Piano Co., of Chicago, and Sherman Clay & Co., of San Francisco, has been in Coos county some little time in the interests of these companies and while he has represented them well and done a good business in the musical instrument line, he has done some lodge work, being connected with the Knight of Pythias. This gentleman has also furnished the Evening Telegram with very interesting and reliable articles concerning this county's resources, advantages and outlook for the future, and, he did not stop here. He called attention to some of the disadvantages as well, and urged the necessity of overcoming them and offered some suggestions as to the proper remedies. These articles are attracting attention and it be hooves the people of Coos County to put forth an effort to direct some of the immigration to this coast into this part of the state. Coos and Curry counties have more to offer home seekers than many other sections and while our most serious disadvantages are not of a permanent nature, but can be overcome by the necessary enterprise and energy, we should not be backward in inviting newcomers here to take part with us in this part of the work, the most important of which is the building of roads. Another important move would be the establishment of a steamer line between this river and Portland and is a thing that will be looked after in the near future but may require a little more development work in this section and a material improvement made in the business relations of this section and our states metropolis.
