Surveyor S. B. Cathart was called upon to do some leveling down at the mouth of Fat Elk creek by some of the parties interested in lands in that section, and he finds that there is over four feet of fall between the river at low tide and the land there which some are making arrangements to drain. It is to be hoped that this matter will be pushed forward as there is a fine body of bottom there that should be utilized for raising grass for dairy cows.

While working in the logging camp of Watson & Anderson, on Coos river, Saturday, the 11th inst., Gus Holm received an injury from which he has since died. It seems Mr. Holm was driving a dog or wedge in to a log when a sliver from the same struck him in the neck cutting the carotid artery slightly, and making quite an incision in the interior jugular vein. By holding the wound firmly with his hand he checked the flow of blood to such an extent that a clot formed and prevented his bleeding to death at once, but later on, when the reaction took place, the wound broke afresh and while all possible was done, for him, these efforts proved futile and he passed away the following Thursday.
