The following we take from The Oregon Agriculturest and Rural Northwest, in which some good points are made in regard to Oregon raising her own seed and seed grain. Only a few years ago there were comparatively few of the pestifferous weeds that now torment our farmers had found their way to the coast, but by constantly shipping in seeds and grain from all quarters of the globe, we may expect the troublisome weeds from just so many sources. Coos county is now suffering to a greater or less degree from a large variety of obnoxious weeds from the Canada thistle to the little garden grass which were unknown here when farming was first begun Our friend, J. H. Lamb of Fishtrap, is a fair example along this line. His place is kept clear of obnoxious weeds, and he takes pains to put his grain in at the proper season, and uses care and judgment in reaping, and the consequences are that he has a market for every bushell of grain he can raise, and gets his own price for it, while those who are careless in their manner of raising their crops can only demand the ordinary price:

"It is not easy to understand why Oregon imports so much clover and timothy seed from the east. These seeds when grown with suitable care in this state are superior in quality to those imported from the east. The imported seeds are constantly adding also to the number of weeds in this region, as it is practically impossible to obtain grass seeds which are wholly freed from weed seeds. It is estimated that from ten to fifteen carloads of clover and timothy seed come to Oregon yearly from the east. The freight charges alone on each carload amounts to between $300 and $400. There are also other grass seeds which should be grown in larger quantities in the northwest. The Bromus inermis grass seed exhibited by the U. S. department of agriculture was grown in Idaho for Lamberson's Seed Store, of Portland, and supplied by that house to the department of agriculture, which pronounced it the finest sample it had been able to secure. Diversified agriculture, in its broadest sense, means the development of every agricultural industry which our climatic, soil and market conditions enable us to develop with profit".

There is now good reason to expect that the coming Oregon State Fair will be a better one than any of its predecessors. The display of live stock gives promise of being decidedly the largest and most complete in the history of the fair and the exhibition of live stock is the really valuable feature of any state fair. Of the pavillion displays the leading part will be taken by country exhibits. President Wehrung and Secretary Wisdon have visited most of the counties of the state and with such good effect that there will be a very strong competition among the county exhibits this year.

A Clear Statement.

The Chamberberg, Pa., Register sizes up the olomargarine situation very justly as follows:

Already thirty-two states have enacted legislation to repress the imitation butter fraud in behalf of the dairymen, yet the sales of the bogus stuff increase from year to year. Its makers have gained a market for it under false pretenses, and now that it finds indorsment in many high quarters, they are unable or unwilling to terminate its long course of masquerading as pure creamery butter.

If olemargarine be all that is claimed for it, no edict of authority can prevent its use and sale; but the naked swindle of selling at butter prices and as butter, a food product which costs nine cents per pound to manufacture, will certainly be fought in the halls of legislation by every available device of opposition. It is a fraud that the people object to, not the article itself.

Theodore Thomas, the great musician, was asked by an eastern newspaper to nam what he thought the American people most needed in the twentieth century. His answer was "Honesty" "truthfulness." This oleo contention on the part of the dairymen of the United States is a crusade for honesty and against fraud. It seems to astonish the makers of their greasy swindle as well as their political friends very much, that there should be any body left in this country who will use their political power to force a fight against fraud. They cried, with a triumphant air, at Washington, how much their business amounted to in dollars and cents, as though that made it any less odious and offensive to outraged honesty. As well might the prostitutes of the United States, stand up and demand protection in their nefarious trafic because, forsooth, it amounts to much money every year. These swindlers will yet find that the old fashioned aversion to a fraud has not died out of the hearts of the American people.

The voters of Oregon will be called upon to cast their ballots at the next regular state election for or against an amendment to the constitution providing for legislation by the system known as the "Initiative and referandum." The constitution of Oregon provides that all amendments must pass the legislature at two successive sessions, and then be ratified by a majority vote of the legal voters of the state. The amendment for the initiative and referandum has twice passed the legislature and now goes to the people for their ratification. This is a very important measure and should not be overlooked or lightly esteemed by the people of Oregon. If adopted it will effectually shut off legislative grafts, as all important laws will be voted upon by the voters before they can go into effect. Of course if any measure detrimental to the interests of the people should be enacted by the legislature it will be ventilated before the next election, and will be voted down. Then again, it will prevent the enacting of so many frivoulous laws in the state, as ambitious legislators will not care to have their trivial matters run the gauntlet of an election by the people. Then again, it would result in the laws being expressed in plainer and clearer terms so as to be understood by everybody, and would also make it necessary for the legal voters to acquaint themselves with the statute laws of the state. So it is high time for the people to be studying up this measure so as be prepared to vote on it intelligently.—Times, Jacksonville.

Pacific Coast Marines.

Captain John Ross claims to have located the wreck of the steamer City of Rio de Janeiro in San Francisco bay and is arranging to begin wrecking operations.

Twenty tramp steamers are on the way to the coast from Atlantic and foreign ports, and are expected practically to demoralize the grain-carrying trade the coming season, so far as the sailing vessels are concerned.

The hull of the bark Mermaid was burned for junk at Port Blakeley, Wash., last week. The Mermaid is said to have been the oldest vessel on the coast, having been built on the Atlantic coast sixty-four years ago.

The naval board appointed under the terms of an act of congress to examine into the advantage of Lakes Union and Washington, near Seattle, as fresh water basins for laying up naval vessels, has made an adverse report upon the proposition.

Secretary of the Navy Long has ordered the naval board to reconvene at San Francisco and take up the question of additional compensation to the Mare Island dock contractors. The increased cost grows out of the change from wood to stone.—Coast Seamen's Journal.

A Good Report.

To the Editor.] We have been in the Angora goat business only about a year, but think we are making fairly good headway: Have just got through kidding. Out of one hundred and forty-six does we have secured two hundred and five kids.

Our does sheared on an average 3½ pounds per head. This was year's growth and was sheared in February. We shipped our mohair to Messrs. Kitching & Bicknell, and have just received returns today which show that it netted us 25 cents per pound.

We have only lost altogether two old goats and eight kids.

There are a great many goats in this natural goat country. No disease of any kind is so far known here. Our winters are not severe and goats do well without being fed or even sheltered at any time during the year. We can kid early here as the brush leaves out early and the weeds come early.

We will be in the market this fall for two good bucks to replace two of the four we now have.

B. F. BROWN & SON.
Lincoln Co., N. M. in Rural Northwest.

The following excerpt we take from "Echos From Dairy Meetings" in the Pacific Homestead of the 13th inst;

At Silverton a number of questions were asked, which led to an open discussion of many subjects pertaining to successful farmers. One man present said he had failed in attempting to cure clover hay. Mr. Smith said that the best way he had ever found was to stow it away in layers of equal parts of green clover and straw, never making the layers of clover over 12 inches thick, to cut the clover in the moring of a fair day, mowing no greater quantity than could be raked up and put away in the afternoon, and to leave it in the field only long enough to wilt.

To the question whether it was possible to use the clover for ensilage, Mr. Smith said that if a man had a silo and rain should come while his clover was in the field, he would better put it into the silo before it got dry, rather than to try to take care of it in any other way but that if the conditions were such that the clover could be cured into hay, the farmer should feed it as hay and fill the silo with fodder corn. Mr. Smith also said that a larger measure of feed could be secured from Indian corn than from any other plant, and that the silo was the best place to put it. The saving in waste and labor each year would more than pay the expenses of building a silo. He considered the combination of corn ensilage and clover hay the best forage for dairy cows, and would feed a corn basketful of ensilage night and morning and all the clover hay the animals would eat up clean at noon. A stave silo large enough to hold 50 tons may be built at an expense of $50, and plans for building it may be secured free of cost from the State Agricultural College at Corvallis, or from any of the agricultural papers.

To Present Oregon's Pennant to State.

San Francisco, June 16.—It is estimated that repairs to the Oregon which has just arrived home from the Orient, rendered necessary by the damage sustained when wrecked in the Gulf of Pe Chi Li, will require about six months on the dry-dock and cost fully $250,000. It is intended to present the silk pennant which the Oregon carried on her homeward voyage to the state of Oregon upon the vesael's going out of commission during repairs. A special detail of three petty officers will carry it to the state officials at Salem.
