Lighthouses Wanted

Pursuant to request from the passengers of the steamer Elk, in regard to the dangers that confront the mariner in northern waters, as a prelude I will say I was born and reared on the prairies of Iowa, hence am an American citizan and am proud of it. No better government ever existed, but the best regulated families sometimes make serious mistakes, and neglect important matters. The last summer and fall I have traveled over 5000 miles of Uncle Sam's seaboard possessions in Alaska and Arctic waters. During this pilgrimage among the different avenus and separate roadways there was not a lighthouse erected to cast its illuminating rays, or fog siren to warn the mariner of approaching danger. Neither is there a channel or obstruction buoy; with all of its dangerous reefs and projecting capes, just as nature had left them, so they remain unmarked by the handiwork of man. It is no wonder that the sour doughs of Alaska and modern shellbacks have a grievnce to relate, with the thousands of human subjects and millions of dolars' worth of property at stake subject to the dangers of a rocky coast and treacherous sea beset with tide ripples and adverse currents, unaided and unguarded The mariner feels and gropes his way in darkness and quite frevuently to disastrous results as the numerous wrecks are monuments to varify the aforesaid; and the subjects whose lots are cast among these uninviting circumstences ask for redress from a dilitory congress so there will cease to be a wanton and useless sarifice of life and property. The universal cry is, "When oh when will congress cease to filibuster and make provisions to protect the subjects of its acquired possessions?."

In a brief way I will mention a few instances of the many obstacles that came to my observation which require immediate action: Cape Prince of Wales and shoals is on the Arctic ocean, and the shoals extend a long way out to sea. Courses are changed here, providing the weather is clear, but during foggy weather there is nothing to guide the mariner but constant heaving of the lead and the screech of the seabird, which denotes close proximity of danger. No fog siren to greet the mariner's anxious ear. Port Clarence and Grantly Harbor are the next most important places. This is a blind entrance to a splendid harbor and a commercial center of vast importance, but neglected by congress. Nature has done a great deal for this port. A small amount would erect a light on Spencer point and be of inestimable benefit to commerce. Kings Island is situated in the roadway of vessels navigating Bering sea, and is a nuisance to navigation. A light there would be a guiding star indeed. Many a time vessels are compelled to heave to to ascertain their exact location. There is no aid to navigation, except that all of the islands and rocky cliffs of the mainland are frequented by myriads of birds, whose constant crys and flights serve to indicate the approach to shore at those places in thick dark weather. There is no systematic study of the currents of Bering sea; tides are irregular and at variance, governed by the wind, adverse currents of the Arctic with a maximum of two and one-half knot current, consequently it is a frequent occurrence for the careful navigator to find his vessel two or three points off of his true course. Sledge island is 25 miles from Nome, four miles from the mainland; vessels pass either side; altitude 500 feet, and is a refuge for vessels in case of storm; good anchorage with a bold and abrupt bank. A light established thereon would be discernable 40 miles; but neglected—looking to the interests of the Philippines instead of our own subjects, and commercial traffic, which is enormous in Beridg sea. Cape Nome is a promontory, extending a long distance from the mainland and 10 miles frem Nome City, the metropolis of Bering sea, and a place of vast importance commercially. There is no light situated at the cape, nor buoys to denote anchorage, but a large number of wrecks strewn promiscuously around, which ought to be marked "Sacred to the memory of last Congress," From Nome to Dutch Harbor is clear sailing, until the head of Unimack Pass, which is the widest of the Fox Island passes. A light is needed at the head of the pass. Steamers sometimes are a day or two in thick and heavy weather seeking for an entrance, groping among the false passes, and in fog and darkness it is hard to distinguish among the different false passes. All could be overcome with a light at the entrances, and thousands of dollars annually could be saved. All along the coast there are rocky reefs and capes and numerous islands. Kadiac islands is a place of importance; good harbor, but on the port side the entrance a rocky reef extends to mid-channel, and ther rests the wrecked steamer Tillamook instead of a beacon or light. All would have been avoided had the place received it just deserts from a bountiful government.

The entrance to Virgen bay that leads to Valdes is another place very essential for a light. Four or five steamers ply constantly these waters, and it is destined for a bright future. Steamers approaching at night or in foggy weather are compelled to lay to until daylight, or fog clears away. But the place most dangerous and intricate is the entrace to Cross sound preparatory to ascending the ice straits. It has a false entrace, and nothing but careful manipulation will avoid disastrous results. One light will surmount the difficulty, and render this great thoroughfare safe at all times, and make it a harbor of refuse for vessels in case of distress. From the sound commences the icy straits—no light to greet the eye of the mariner; with no buoy to mark the channel, projections and reefs extending into the channel; thus it is the mariner gropes his way to Juneau, the metropolis of the straits and from Juneau, down, with and exception of Wrangle narrows, which I suppose was buoyed by individuals, it is a repetition of the above until we reach Canadian waters, and there we behold the welcome fight on every point of danger, erected and dedicated for the benefit of commerce, and it comes as a harbinger of peace to the anxious and weary mariner. His troubles are over and he can rest in sweet repose in Canadian waters. Her lighthouses are not as elaborate as some on the American coast, but suffice to say they are neat and answer all requirements. Why cannot our government take some steps towards providing for the safety of its subjects and protection of commerce? There is an old maxim, and it is applicable in this instance—"A pyudent and judicious farmer will take care of what stock he has, rather than increase the amount and thereby starve all." Uncle Sam had better take care of and provide for his already acquired possessions before he expands too much and neglects all. Alaska asks for more light and less red tape; red tape will illuminate the Philippines, but it requires a white, sparkling and variegated light to mark the dangersous rocky reefs and capes on the seaboard of Alaska. Futhermore, the wealth that is annually taken from that country is deserving of consideration, and it is to be hoped that congress will arouse from its drowsy lethergy, cease its fillibustering, and make provisions for the safety of its subjects and commerce.

In conclusion let me add that there are wrecks strewn all along the seaboard, monuments for the sober and candid consideration of our worthy congress, and that there are not more is owing to the skillful and alert efficiency of the navigators casting their lots along their rocky and unmarked coast. With constant fear of obstruction that menace the navingation, is it any wonder that hardy men turn gray in their prime of life? The only consolation that cheers the skipper is when his ship emerges into Canadian waters. In conclusion, properly lights the Alaska coast; establish a serviceable lifesaving station at Nome City. Then the son of the sea will rejoice, the traveler will not consider it an irksome task but a relaxtion from business cares to travel the waters of the Alaska coast, knowing that an able and generous government has discharged its duty towards its subjects by extending its arm of protection over its acquired possessions. With its mountainous coast and numerous islands, it is a wonder, despite the energetic efforts of the careful navigator, that delays occur, and frequently disaster results?—H. W. DUNHAM in Coos Bay News.

Joaquin Miller's Daughter Dead.

Oakland, December 24.—Miss Maud Miller, actress and daughter of Joaxuin Miller, the poet died this morning at the Garfield Home 1805 Nineteenth avenue, East Oakland. Death came suddenly after an illness of four days, and is attributed to a complication of heart disease, aggravated by the hard and trying experiences of the Circuit stage.

Maud Miller was thirty-nine years of age She married a man named McCormick, from whom she was divorced. She was born at Cape Blanco, Oregon. Too close application to her work is supposed to have caused her breakdown in what should have been the prime of life.

The funeral will take place tomorrow, and the remains will be interred at "The Heights," as Josquin Miller's home on the hills overlook Oakland is called.

ALL CASES OF
DEAFNESS OR HARD HEARING ARE NOW CURABLE
by our new invention. Only those born deaf are incurable.
HEAD NOISES CEASE IMMEDIATELY.
F. A. WERMAN, OF BALTIMORE, SAYS:
BALTIMORE, Md., March 30, 1901.
Gentlemen:—Being entirely cured of deafness, thanks to your treatment, I will now give you a full history of my case, to be used at your discretion.
About five years ago my right ear began to sing, and this kept on getting worse, until I lost my hearing in this ear entirely.
I underwent a treatment for catarrh, for three months, without any success, consulted a number of physicians, among others, the most eminent ear specialist of this city, who told me that only an operation could help me, and even that only temporarily, that the head noises would then cease, but the hearing in the affected ear would be lost forever.
I then saw your advertisement accidentally in a New York paper, and ordered your treatment. After I had used it only a few days according to your directions, the noises ceased, and to-day, after five weeks, my hearing in the diseased ear has been entirely restored. I thank you heartily and beg to remain Very truly yours,
