His Place as President

President Roosevelt has now over half completed the most extended move, rolled against him, breaking tour ever made by a president of the United States. His trip is making him friends wherever he goes, and people are more and more feeling that the appellation, "The Typical American," is one in entire accord with his moral, political amd social actions. With whatever class of to San Diego by F. S. Dow, seem to people he was associated, he has always been one of them in thought and action, but always upholding strict integrity and right doing.

When he was on the plains he was as thorough a cowboy as he was society man among the New York Four Hundred, or politcan when he was fighting the boodlers in the New York State Legislature. If Roosevelt makes no more serious mistake than he has thus far made he will deserve a high place in the Nation's history. - Centralia Chronicle.
