BUSY AND BEAUTIFUL.

Coos Bay Has Charms to Soothe Merchant and Artist.

Marshfield, Or., Sept. 10.—(To the Editor.)—I have been impressed by the beauty and natural wealth of Coos County, as it appears to me on this, my first visit. From the western boundary to the coast line, streams are lined with a thick growth of timber, including a vast amount of myrtle trees unexcelled for there size and symmetry. Rich stock and dairy farms, adorned with comfortable dwellings, with huge well-filled barns, are seen from the very headwaters to the mouths of streams. The meadows are green throughout the summer. The vegetation from river to hilltop is of a rich dark green, and its profusion reminds one of the tropics. The hills and valleys never reflect a glaring sunlight, and on the brightest days one looks with wideopen eyes upon a landscape subdued by the shadows ever present in the angles and coves of the hills, and the restful effects of the foliage of darkest green.

The people are prosperous. Wages paid for labor are good. The farms are small and belong to the many, and the varied products of farm are bringing good prices. The stores are capacious, well equipped and heavily stocked. Myrtle Point, Coquille and Marshfield all enjoy an enormous trade, and in turn supply a good shipping point for the product of forest and fields. Every town has its creamery, which is supplied with milk gathered by the boats plying the numerous rivers and bayous. Sawmills are seen here and there in the interior and on the bay, and the arctic and streams leading far back into the hills afford natural highways along which logs are transported to the mills.

The coal mines are worthy of special mention. I had not realized that a single coal mine in our own state has been netting its owners $100,000 a year; that another mine has just been developed at an expense of $1,000,000, bringing within reach 5,000,000 tons of coal is being shipped from Coos County to various parts of the United States; that people in this section use for fuel coal stone coal, mined from the hills of Coos County and bought at $1 a ton.

Coos County is resting upon a thick vein of coal, a fact patent to those who have seen the results of numerous experiments at various points. This fact of nature is supplementary to another greater fact, namely, that Coos Bay is a good, safe and convenient harbor, admitting vessels 19 feet of water. It is a harbor which, at a moderate cost, can be deepened, the channel conditions being such that whatever improvements are made will be permanent. These facts have been ascertained by surveys made by Government engineers, their report being now on file.

A glance at a map of the West-coast of America shows that only in three or four places 1500 miles of coast line are there indentations in the rude mountain wall where vessels can find safe haven. After San Francisco, the mouth of the Columbia and Puget Sound, Coos Bay harbors in importance. These harbor openings are or will be terminal points for transcontinental railway lines, where fleets of ships will lie ready to carry the products of the empire behind the mountains and return with the goods of far countries. Coos Bay will become the home of a large city. Nature has decreed it. Though her soil were of granite, yet would she be the firm support of a commercial city where ship and rail meet, forming an unbroken highway between New York and the Orient. With inexhaustible coal fields adjacent, a convenient harbor stretching away across the bar to the deep sea, Coos Bay will become one of Oregon's centers of commerce and manufacture.

As I write, a beautiful picture is spread out before me. In the foreground is the Carina, a steamer just now unloading at the wharf her cargo of merchandise, preparatory to taking on her 1300-ton cargo of coal. Around the bay are seen six tall-masted schooners being loaded with lumber, as with means mysterious to the landsman huge bundles are being hoisted to their decks. On either hand a half dozen small steamers are nestled against the wharves, whence they are about to start on their outward journey up river or down the bay. Here and there, enlivening the scene, are numerous small boats. Fishing smacks and gasoline launches hurrying to and fro, carrying passengers and light merchandise. At the left the tall lifting apparatus erected over the beautiful schooner being built at North Bend, just now ready to receive her mast, is plainly to be seen. As the central figure, the steam tug Columbia is moving towards the sea, as, with mighty cable attached, she drags after her the schooner James A. Garfield, heavily freighted with the products of our own mills for distant markets. The buzz of saws, the whirr of machinery, the noise of escaping steam a score of engines din upon the ear. As a background and encircling it all, the hills are seen through the mellow atmosphere, looking like emerald isles floating in a crystal sea. This is a picture of life and beauty that cannot fail to impress the observer. In it is seen the dawn of a greater day for greater Oregon. B. F. Mulkey.—Oregonian

Against Women Stenographers.

The Northwestern Railway's decision that none of the women stenographers in its service will be allowed to qualify for promotion or be eligible for its pension list has naturally created a stir among women workers in general and women stenographers in particular. The company explains its action on the ground that "a women stenographer can never be anything else."

That certainly is not true in other lines of business, however it may be in railroad service. Women who began as stenographers in law and commercial houses and in the service of city, state and nation are filling higher positions, with broader and more responsible duties, in large numbers. They become private secretaries, clerks in charge of correspondence, court stenographers and librarians. Not a few of them conduct independent businesses, with staffs of stenographers and typewriters whom they furnish to do work on call, and make net incomes of $4000 to $7000 a year.

It is a fact of current interest that while in some other callings— notably that of school teaching— women are paid much less than men for the same service, the woman stenographer is paid as well and sometimes better than a man stenographer. If she is expert and has general aptitude for business, apart from her stenography, she often receives from $1200 to $2500 a year; as a court reporter one of them at least in this city is known to be paid the last named sum. The Northwestern Railway's curious ruling is a belated expression of the old prejudice against the industrial equality of woman, which is nevertheless almost extinct.—New York World.

Rich Gold Deposits Found in River Bed.

Jacksonville, Or., Sept. 11.—As the result of construction of a dam across Rogue river near here to conserve water for power purposes a fabulously rich deposit of placer gold has been discovered in the bed of the stream. It is estimated that $250,000 is in sight.

Alexander Orme, foreman of dam construction, was the finder of the gold bearing gravel. He panned out $100 worth in two and a half hours, but as soon as the fact that gold existed in the bar became known the power company refused to allow further mining operations. Extensive preparations are being made to work the property.

The case of the St. Louis man who died after taking his first bath in twenty years, should prove a warning to people who are tempted to unduly prolong the intervals.

The time for settling the place in which to hold the national conventions is drawing nearer, and Milwaukee, St. Louis and Kansas City have begun throwing bouquets at each other.

Carter Harrison, mayor of Chicago, says he will retire to private life at the close of his present term, but those who remember his father will receive the announcement with reservation.

Some people are asking why Bacon (the Senator) should draw the line at the son of Ham. It seems the Senator did not enjoy waiting in a dining hall until a distinguished African had finished his dinner.

It is estimated that there are 10,000,000 tons of anthracite coal in the dealer's hands, which is far better than the situation a year ago. The only thing that bothers the householder is to get a few tons in his hands.

For Mercy's Sake.

A movement to establish a retreat in this city for homeless consumptives is, it is said, about to be inaugurated. Such a project is well worthy the consideration of a generous and humane people. The object, so far as it has been defined, is not to treat consumptives in the incipient stages with the hope of restoring them to health, but to furnish the pitiable victims of this wasting malady who are homeless and who have reached the incurable stage with a cheerful, quiet comfortable home, in which to spend the short allotment of time that is left to them.

The number of sufferers who need a retreat of this kind in this community is not large. A small home would be sufficient to accommodate them, and at present there is literally no place where they can go and receive the care that their condition demands. Bacteriology, in discovering and disclosing the nature of consumption, has made consumptives unwelcome everywhere; whether as patients in hospitals and sanitariums or visitors at health resorts they are undesirable if not forbidden guests.

Sensitive, weak, fading, without hope of recovery, sufferers from this disease have a strong claim upon our sympathy, especially so when they must find shelter where they can, unaided, and are deprived by circumstances of the care and nourishment upon which such comfort as may still attend them depends.

The time will come when no community can call itself civilized and allow the victims of this pitifully lingering disease to drag out their last days in dark, unsuitable perhaps noisome lodgings, because, either for pecuniary reasons or from the fact that they are shunned as infectious, they must take any room that they can get. If this matter is properly brought before the public, with a feasible plan upon which to work, there is no doubt but the financial aid necessary to establish and maintain a suitable retreat of a few rooms for this class of sufferers can be secured. It may be hoped, in the name of common humanity, which includes public safety, that the movement will take practical shape and be pushed to a successful issue.—Oregonian.

National Fraternal Congress.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The national fraternal congress, representing 60 fraternal insurance organizations doing business in all parts of the country, met in seventeenth annual session with a good attendance of delegates. The annual reports of President Joseph A. Longhill of Pittsburgh, Secretary M. W. Sackett of Meadville, Pa., and of various other officers and committees, show that since the last session of the congress much substantial progress for the fraternal beneficiary system has been made. Several insurance departments have announced that the examination of the departments of the home state would be accepted by them; legislation, exempting the reserve fund of fraternal orders from taxation has been secured in three states, proposed laws detrimental to the interests of the fraternal companies have been defeated, and progress along many other lines has been made.

Turkey wasn't guilty, but most editors meant it just the same and have nothing to take back. It is pleasant to know that the statistics favor lower prices for beef, even though the trust does not. The Columbian Congress is merely furnishing ammunition for Senator Morgan's slow fire, continuous performance. Germans are astonished at the American locomotive they recently imported and which will pull 5,400 tons. They say it "beats the Dutch."

Every once in a while some sanguine stranger from Arizona or New Mexico turns up in Washington and announces that there is to be another statehood fight.

"Acquiring" Indian land is not new. Good old William Penn acquired Pennsylvania. But the human conscience has marched since these good old quaker days and we cannot allow our government clerks to play the role of William Penn.

It appears from accurate statistics that our last Fourth of July celebrations resulted in over 400 deaths from immediate killing or resultant lock-jaw and that three thousand were wounded, but it is not stated how many sick and wasted invalids had their death hastened or compassed by the pandemonium of noise and sulphurous smell. Can't this vile, expensive and murderous racket be stopped?

A Remarkable Record.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has a remarkable record. It has been in use for over thirty years, during which time many million bottles have been sold and used. It has long been the standard and main reliance in the treatment of croup in thousands of homes, yet during all this time no case has ever been reported to the manufacturers in which it failed to effect a cure. When given as soon as the child becomes hoarse or even as soon as the croupy cough appears, it will prevent the attack. It is pleasant to take, many children like it. It contains no opium or other harmful substance and may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by R. S. KNOWLTON.

The Oregon State Mining Association was organized at Portland in the Mining Exchange rooms, Chamber of Commerce Monday, under the most favorable auspices. The purposes of the organization are to afford the mining men of Oregon an opportunity to consult with each other and exchange views on matters pertaining generally to mining interests in this section. J. F. Wickham, of Galice, Oregon, is president, and A. L. Morrison, of Portland, is secretary.

A Purgative Pleasure.

If you ever took DeWitt's Little Early Risers for biliousness or constipation you know what a purgative pleasure is. These famous little pills cleanse the liver and rid the system of all bile without producing unpleasant effects. They do not gripe, sicken or weaken, but give tone and strength to the tissues and organs involved. W. H. Howell, of Houston, Tex., says, "No better pill can be used than Little Early Risers for constipation, sick headache, etc." Sold by R. S. Knowlton.

The Southern Oregon State Normal School begins this year's work September 16th. A large working library has been added; the physical and chemical laboratory has been fully equipped; a new gymnasium building is being erected, and a large and handsome school building is nearing completion. The school grounds are beautiful and picturesque. The health conditions are of the best; the social environment is pure and stimulating; the course of study has been strengthened and made more practical. The faculty has been increased in number and the school is now equipped to do work of the highest order. This school belongs to Southern Oregon. It desires and merits the patronage of the people of this great section. For catalogue address, BENJAMIN F. MULKEY, President, Ashland, Oregon.

The business manufacturing shingles will be continued by Mr. Albee.

His Life Saved by Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera, and Diarrhoea Remedy.

"B. L. Ryer, a well known cooper of this town, says he believes Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy saved his life last summer. He had been sick for a month with something the doctors call bilious dysentery, and could get nothing to do him any good until he tried this remedy. It gave him immediate relief," says B. L. Little, merchant, Hancock, Md. For sale by R. S. Knowlton.
