A BUSINESS VIEW.

In a recent meeting of the Portland board of trade, we find the following: "Mr. B. Goldsmith said that foreign countries should not be allowed to drive American lead from the markets of the world. The main lead producing countries of Europe are Spain, England and Germany. The duty is two cents per pound. The price of lead in New York is about 4 1/2 cents per pound. Lead miners in Europe earn on an average forty cents a day. The freight from Europe to New York is $3 to $5 a ton. Lead miners in America earn $3 to $3.50 per day. Freight on base bullion and lead from Idaho, Montana and Colorado is $15 to $18 a ton. It would be destruction to the mining interests of the North Pacific coast if the duty on lead is repealed. Such an act would close three-fourths of the mines now operated. It would throw out of employment thousands of men directly engaged in the mining industry and thousands indirectly interested.

"Mr. Goldsmith moved that a committee of three be appointed to investigate the question and report to the board a memorial to congress asking that the duty on lead be not repealed.

"Mr. Win. Kapus heartily favored the motion. He was a protectionist. He wanted not only to protect the mining industries of the country but the great lumber and the wool interests of the state. The free-traders were making an especial fight on wool. Mr. Kapus moved an amendment to include wool and lumber in the investigation by the committee.

"The motion as amended prevailed, and Messrs. Goldsmith, Kapus and Cameron were appointed as such committee."

It will be observed that the tenor of the above action is a strict business view of the situation, without consideration of past or future party affiliation. The funny part of the business, however, comes in with the members of the democratic party of the state, who are vehemently crying for the tariff on wool, lumber, etc. to be removed, when they discover that the chairman of their state central committee is also chairman on a committee to memorialize congress not to remove those duties.

IS IT LUCK?

The tendency of the human mind to accept some occult forces as the cause of circumstances, whether adverse or favorable, is a peculiarity that attaches to almost every person no matter what their situation or condition. Many will feel like denying this aspersion, but a close watch upon themselves when they give an involuntary shiver at viewing the moon over the left shoulder, or some other equally absurd hallucination, will convince them of its truthfulness.

The London Spectator thinks that the belief in luck results from a persistent effort to explain what is to the majority inexplicable, and we may suspect that as the inexplicable is usually attributed to an unseen chain of causes a good many senseless efforts to change the luck—as, for instance, turning the chair at whist or changing one's house—are efforts, conscious or unconscious, to break the chain of causality, to deflect the stream, as it were, and make it pass us. But his explanation does not in the least meet the strange feeling which attaches to luck or ill luck to animate things, a feeling which, avowed throughout the East and nearly universal with the vulgar of the West, lingers even among the cultivated to an astonishing degree. We have not men and women entirely free from it, or at least so free that neither they nor we could detect it; but we suspect the majority of our readers will admit that they are aware of its existence in their own minds—that is, that they possess or know of things to which, in spite of reason, they attach lucky or unlucky influence. The extent of the feeling varies with temperament, but few are wholly free from it, and with some it is an abiding conviction, leading, in the case of the loss of the thing thus valued, to acute mental suffering. It is not all association which induces women to sob over a mislaid wedding ring, or brave officers to put on a particular sword when going on a specially dangerous expedition.

tion. It is not an inexplicable but continuous experience, for there has been no experience. That solution would explain the belief of Nottinghamshire that a particular house always kills the first-born of its owner—wholly irrespective of descent—while the owner is still alive. That idea, so strong as to affect the value of property, is no doubt the result of a long series of singular coincidences, the breaks in which, not being remarkable, have not been remarked; but in most cases there is no justifying experience. The vase or cup or jewel or house to which a family attaches honor as in some way connected with the "luck" of their race has never been broken or lost or sold; and they themselves, as they show their treasure, reject with their intellects a belief nevertheless so operative that no price would purchase its object from their possession. The man who has kept a lucky coin for years has never had any luck from it; the woman who, being an agnostic, is miserable because an old crucifix has fallen and broken in the fall, was never consciously benefited by the object of her superstition.
