A RAILROAD TRUST.

As a doer in the direction in which the railroads are tending the Chronicle has the following: "A movement has been made to consolidate in one trust all the railroads between Chicago and the Rocky mountains and between the British boundary and Indian territory."

A contemporary doubts if so heavy an aggregation of capital and corporate interests could hold together, and thinks that in the event of its holding together it would have to settle with the law and the Interstate Commission.

In the first place, there is no law at present in existence which would be directly violated by such a combination, or to which an appeal could be had.

As to the conflict with the Interstate Commission, a state of affairs can be easily imagined in which such conflict would not be probable and perhaps not even possible.

Up to the present time a majority of the cases which have come before that commission have been based on the proposition that injustice is being done by a certain railroad corporation, but this was precluded on the allegation that the corporation complained of was doing something different from another corporation.

Nor would such a trust conflict, in terms, with Section 5 of the interstate commerce act. That section makes it unlawful for any common carrier to enter into any contract, agreement or combination with any other common carrier for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads; but it does not provide against the absorption of any number of competing railroads by a trust, nor does the act anywhere limit the schedule of fares and freights, except to say that they shall be just and reasonable.

The whole act is framed upon the theory of regulation by competition, and of helping the people to make a stingy, close-fisted railroad do as well for them as a generous, liberal one; but if all the Northwestern railroads are welded into one, where is the competition, or by what comparative scale can changes be adjusted?

"Let us make no mistake as to the possibility of the creation of such a trust. It is wholly feasible and by no means improbable; and we must face the contingency squarely and fairly. The Pacific coast is especially interested in it, as it will stand like a foreign country between us and the East, drawing tribute from California and exacting toll on our east-bound shipments of every kind. Let us consider the matter and see whether any remedy short of governmental control is adequate to deal with the threatened danger."

The democratic central national committee met in Washington, and decided to hold the convention on the third day of July. Ten ballots were taken upon the place of holding it, and on the tenth ballot the vote stood San Francisco 17, Chicago 15, St. Louis 14, Cincinnati 1, when they adjourned to the next day. Our dispatches this morning show, however, that the whole thing has been repudiated, even the date being changed to June 5. St. Louis gets the convention as a compromise. It looks like a defeat for Cleveland—a sort of forerunner of his bigger defeat next autumn.

The police in Coleraine, Ireland, found a man with dynamite in his possession, which he claimed to have for blasting purposes, but they concluded they had caught a true dynamiter and expect to unearth a huge plot. Perhaps they have, but more likely they have found only a huge scare of their own making.
