RAILROAD COMMISSION LAW

Since the enactment of the railroad commission law by the last session of our legislature, the attention of the people has been directed to its workings, and much speculation has been engaged in as to the ultimate value of a railroad commission.

Experience in the past is the best guide in the future, and it seems to have occurred to our ancestors long ago that the carrying trade of the world, then almost exclusively done upon the waters, demanded for itself, and for the establishment of its just relations, a court or tribunal devoted to the investigation and application of just principles to the transaction of its business.

Good results will be found from adjustment and harmony, and through the application of old rules to new facts rather than from an abandonment of old rules and principles of business.

Most of the evils complained of are the outgrowth of abuses, long practiced abuses which have established themselves in the business of the world, and it is impossible for them to be eradicated at once.

It is hard to realize that an educated young lady of refined sensibility could allow herself to be imbued with the idea thus presented by the Chronicle: "The parents of the young female teacher of the Cheyenne agency ought to prevent her from marrying the Indian buck of whom she is reported to be enamored. A sentimental and conscientious girl frequently conceives strange ideas of her duty, and this young woman probably thinks she has a mission to perform in civilizing the particular savage who has struck her fancy.

The possibilities hinted at in the item of news referred to are scarcely up to the standard of refined morality, but it is said that just before the Prince of Wales left for the Riviera, he proved how useful he really might make himself in a social way if he chose.

The death of the Emperor William, of Germany, terminates the successful reign of one of the oldest, bravest, and most highly esteemed of European rulers.
