PALPABLE EVOLUTION.

Although the doctrine of growth from an atom of matter may not be palatable or acceptable to all people, there are parts of our human attainments that are so palpably the outgrowth of evolution that the fact cannot be denied or overlooked.

Science shows that by human endeavor, man has created speech, by which he may express his thoughts. And out of this endeavor, in all lands and in all time, the unorganized languages of savages have been developed into the languages of modern civilization...

ing rate. Arts are multiplied to secure the joys of life, institutions are multiplied to secure justice, linguistics are multiplied to secure mental communication, and multiplied truths are discovered, so that the body of science is expanding toward the infinite and toward the infinitesimal.

VERY few will really disagree with the opinion that calls out the following strong expression from the Chronicle: "The maudlin letters and talk of murderer Anschlag show that he is a cowardly hypocrite as well as a brate. There is not the slightest question that on the gallows he will talk of going straight to heaven, although it is only a few weeks since he butchered two people who had never done him any harm, merely to get possession of their land. For such a crime there can be no adequate repentance, and for this miscreant to talk of comfort and consolation derived from religion, is nothing short of blasphemy."

The contest over the will of Mrs. A. T. Stewart, in New York, if it succeeds in nothing else, will show to the world how easy it is to dissipate the large fortunes that are amassed by business men. The lawyers are trying to make a case against Judge Hilton by showing that he expended large amounts of coin in settling his own mortgages soon after coming into the control of the Stewart estate.

It is said that the reason the democrats located their nominee for coroner in so remote a precinct was to meet the exigencies required by the regular semi-occasional corpse furnished by the mistaking of some lone hunter for a deer, which at stated intervals during the past few years has provided in that region a subject for a coroner's investigation.
