JUDGES AND JUSTICE.

The many legal decisions that fail to satisfy the popular idea of justice naturally cause an inquiry into the whys and wherefores of such decisions. The inevitable first or hasty conclusion is that the fault lies at the door of the judges who render the decisions and the charge of vernality is at once entered.

That cases of biased findings are made is without doubt true, at least subsequent events, and the demands of the public will upon the subject, would so indicate. But the great majority of the cases submitted to legal inspection are rendered in a manner to create a respect and faith in the judicial branch of our government, and to make it the great bulwark of our national strength and safety, irrespective of the clamor that may be raised under the excitement of the moment, before the full bearing of a legal decision has been fully considered.

Judges, of course, are but human and subject to the same feelings, desires and biasing influences that every other human being is, and it would be little less than a miracle if, under existing influences that makes the almighty dollar the great leading string for all humanity, if self interest did not bind the judicial eye at times and swerve the line from the true leading to exact justice.

Judge Barrett attempts to give some of the reasons for this swerving, when he says: "It ought to be said that if justice miscarries more frequently in this country than in England, owing to the inferiority of our judges, the people are themselves to blame. We have just as good judges as the people are willing to pay for. The whole judicial system, national and state, is founded upon the policy of small salaries. The people want cheap judges, and they get them. The worst feature in the system is that under the whole, the people get very good judges, and occasionally great ones. We may justly expect to receive full value in attainment for our money, with even a large discount for honor and dignity. But we will be disappointed if we hope to average anything more or better. The idea that inferiority results from the elective system is hardly borne out by experience. Tenure is a far more vital matter. Given short terms and meager compensation, the sequitur of poor judges is assured. Life tenure is not in encord with the spirit of our institutions. The happy medium would seem to be a tenure sufficiently long to secure independence and not long enough to awaken despotic tendencies."

Whether he is correct or not as the cause hinging upon the pay of the judges, is a point upon which people accept his opinion as being subject to bias in his personal interest. The prevailing opinion with the people is that the salaries of the judges are rather too high instead of the salaries being too low. The observations of the judge upon the tenure of office subject will meet with the most hearty approval of all readers.

On the subject of railroad control by the government, a New York banker gives expression to the following terse and truthful definition of the situation: "The railroads have probably contributed more than all other agencies combined to make the United States what they are, yet no one will maintain that the incalculable benefits which we have derived from the growth and development has been, and is, wholly unmixed of evil.' Leaving out other considerations, it is not unfair to say that three-quarters of all the legislative corruption from which we have suffered during the past fifty years has been directly chargeable to the railways; and that a very large proportion, perhaps nearly as much as half, of the litigation that has occupied our courts during the same period has been directly connected with railway matters. We could well afford to forget and forgive both the corruption and the litigation, if we now enjoyed a perfected railway system, smoothly working like a vast machine for the general welfare. But, unhappily, the machine does not work smoothly; on the contrary, it is sadly out of joint in a dozen different places, and in as many different ways, at the same time; and the machine is so vast and complex, it so completely covers the whole country, and is so directly and so intimately connected with all our financial and business interests, that there is never a time when some of these interests are not in a state of uncertainty or disquiet, not infrequently in a state of anxiety, and sometimes of collapse, by reason of trouble, financial or otherwise, among the railroads."

Government could, by wholesome legislation upon the subject, so control this immense and still growing railway system so that all parties interested should have fair and equal treatment, so that the interests of the minority stockholder should be guarded so that no majority could "water" his stock out of existence. That government control must come sooner or later.

Newton Self-Wringing Floor Cleaner!

THE OLD WAY | THE NEW WAY

Every housekeeper knows from experience the hard labor required to wash floors and wring the cloths by hand. By using the Newton self-wringing floor cleaner, wringing the cloth by hand is avoided, the hard labor is thereby lessened; the hands do not come in contact with the water, whereby you can use boiling and ammonia water. The Newton self-wringing floor cleaner is light, durable and simple in construction, and well merits the claim of being the best invented.
