FINANCIAL ACUMEN.

Some of the Cleveland administration organs are very much exercised over the fact that the recent purchase of bonds, by the secretary of the treasury, in accordance to the law on that subject, of the face value of $18,088,000 have cost the government $21,665,500, thus paying to the bondholders $6 for every $5 they borrowed. These bonds are part of the 4-per-cent loan falling due in 1907, or nineteen years hence. If this $18,088,000 of bonds were allowed to run until maturity they would earn in interest 76 per cent. of their face value, or 113,746,880, so instead of paying $21,665,500 for the bonds in 1888, we should have to pay $31,834,880 in 1907; or in other words, by buying these bonds at this time, even at the premium which is asked for them, the government saves $10,169,380. It looks to an ordinary man as if it were a paying proposition to pay $6 for $5 if by so doing the government can avoid having to pay $17.60 for $10, which is in round numbers $6 for $3.50.

Yet these administration papers are without the financial acumen to discover any advantage in taking from the vaults of the treasury, where it draws no interest and is in reality an expense instead of a source of income, part of the available surplus and forestalling the payment of these bonds. The trouble is that partizan selfishness forms the very small personal advantage that hides the palpably apparent national advantage of reducing the public debt as fast as possible.

EASTERN news dispatches say that for some time a representative of prominent English millers has been in the Northwest, perfecting a scheme for the direct shipment abroad of Minnesota and Dakota wheat in its purity. The principal object of the plan being to avoid t[illegible] in transfer elevators, hitherto found so hard to prevent. The plan, as completed, provides for a [illegible] company with a capital stock of $2,000,000, the stockholders equally divided between English and Minnesota capitalists. The company will ship to Liverpool via the lakes. When the [illegible] canals shall have made transportation of our leading cereal possible through that route, we will practically be as near the English millers as Minnesota and Dakota farmers, and can compete with them.

THE English people are quite ready to criticise the Americans for being apt to run after British nobility, but after the fulsome flattery heaped upon Vanderbilt, on his reception in England, simply because he stands somewhere near the head of the money aristocracy, which these Britons are quite ready to sneer at as parvenue, it ill becomes them to further criticise. Their worship of money bags is too servile and emulative for them to ever again indulge in calling their American cousins by sarcastic names.

AN overturned lamp on the stage at a literary entertainment at Orangeville, recently, emptied the hall at the imminent risk of life and limb, and the serious injury of one lady. It is a peculiar phase of humanity that on such occasions people seem to be seized with a panic and lose their judgment and self-control.

SENATOR STANFORD wants the river and harbor bill increased by an appropriation of $100,000 for the improvement of San Diego harbor.

The candidate is a road in the land.

PROHIBITION IN POLITICS.

Rev. I. D. Driver, one of the ablest divines of the Pacific coast, speaks plainly and boldly against political prohibition, and does credit to the calling he represents in so doing.

The Oregonian made the assertion that Mr. Driver would speak upon politics with G. M. Miller, whereupon Mr. Driver said he expressed no such intention, but would discuss the subject of prohibition in politics. He said that St. John announced a few weeks ago in Portland that he would speak in the First M. E. church in East Portland on the next Sunday evening (Mr. Driver's church), although he had no such permission, and the announcement that he would discuss politics was as absurd an idea as that he would allow St. John to occupy his pulpit Sunday evening.

When asked his view on the prohibition question, Mr. Driver spoke as follows: "Briefly it is this: To keep prohibition out of politics, and that it is wise to kill the prohibition party as a political organization. No moral reform can ever stand on a political basis. This has been the world's history for 1800 years as I have said many times. Prohibition can no more live in a political atmosphere than oranges can grow in Greenland, or trees of paradise in purgatory. This position I will defend at all proper times."

THE United States senate has set apart Thursday of next week to discuss the admission as states of Washington, North Dakota and Montana territories. The senate probably will but the house will not admit them. Party advancement cannot be secured by their admission.

THE present indications are that Judge Gresham, of Indiana, is the most likely presidential nominee at Chicago, June 19th.
