EFFECT OF CLIMATE.

Later scientific men are beginning to demonstrate that the conditions of nations, so far as civilization and progress is concerned as well as morals and physical development depends materially upon the climate of the region they inhabit. One of our scientific journals has been investigating the subject and deduces many examples proving these conclusions. In investigating the different aspects of matrimony, as a moral guide, it says: "The copper-colored natives of the Peruvian alturas marry late, while under the same parallel the creoles of the Brazilian lowlands do not hesitate to encourage the matrimonial propensities of children in their earliest teens, boys of fourteen and girls of thirteen and twelve, or, if we shall believe Dr. Burmeister, even of ten and nine. The courtships of Sicily, too, are expeditious, even from an Italian point of view, while on the island of Corsica a peculiar state of agrarian difficulties has counteracted the influence of climate. Many of the campanitas or small terrace plains have been so utterly exhausted that the available means of irrigation fail to redeem the impoverished soil, while a large percentage of the productive area is in the hands of the convents, which reserve the right of tenure for their old retainers. Combined with the straitness of that land famine, the over-increase of population became such an unqualified evil that the common sense of the peasants originated a system of ostracism, attaching infamy and social excommunication to the preliminaries as well as to the results of marriage before a specified age. The late marriage of mountaineers, too, may be partly explained by their instinctive love of independence. The sterile soil of a highland region necessitates far and frequent excursions in quest of the means of subsistence, and the unnumbered privilege of personal freedom thus became often a condition of survival. With a marmot and a hand organ, if not with a marmot alone, the young Savoyard perambulates Europe from end to end, till he has accumulated the equivalent of an Alpine competency. The monteros of the upper Apennines roam Italy like gypsies, ready to do any man's harvest-work. Young Scotchmen cross the Tweed or even the Atlantic before they venture to run the risks of matrimony on the precarious resources of a Highland moor. Highlanders, though the stoutest defenders of their native soil, have therefore rarely engaged in wars of conquest; and the most expansive nations, to use a Bismarckian euphuism, were generally lowlanders—Prussians, Russians, Arabs, Mongols, Goths and Tartars. We might add Romans, for the tide of conquest which inundated all the coast lands of the Mediterranean originally emanated from the plains of Latium. Russia will not rest till her fleet rides the eastern Mediterranean as well as the Euxine. Tamerlane avowedly intended to extend his empire to the Atlantic; and, from the campaigns of King Cyrus to the expansive enterprises of Victor Emmanuel, nine out of ten international wars have ended with the victory of northern nations over their southern neighbors. The goddess of fortune would decline to be crowned with a fur cap, and the sun of the south that turns a lynx into a lion does not necessitate a reverse: the process in the case of the human animal; but it is true that a rigorous climate evolves superior staying power, and in war the last shout is worth a dozen challenges."

It would be as difficult for Mr. Smallman to define his position on the prohibition question, as it is for Mr. Stites. The latter says, "No man has ever heard me say whether I am a prohibitionist, or whether I am not." Mr. Smallman simply camped on the trail of every democrat up for office who did not agree with him in supporting prohibition until after he received the nomination for sheriff; then he said he had not been in earnest concerning his position on the prohibition question, and that he would turn about and oppose it if the people would only vote for him. A man of such principles would not make a very good sheriff, and voters should remember it next June.

It would be well, since there will be two democratic members of the supreme court, Judges Strahan and Tuayer, to have the third member a republican by re-electing Judge W. P. Lord. There would then be a republican to watch the democratic members and democrats enough to watch the republican, and keep things evenly balanced, so to speak, and perhaps prevent one-sided decisions.

GOVERNOR PENNOVER, in his address of welcome at the opening session of the Oregon State Grange yesterday, took occasion to deliver a free trade speech. The free trade idea was clothed in the thick wrap of an ingenious phraseology, but it remains to be seen whether such attempts to pull the wool over the eyes of the farmers of Oregon can prevail.

The voters of Linn county have a sensible way of listening patiently to all the speeches made by the candidates on all sides, and their quietness using their own judgment by voting for the best men.

If Congressman Hermann is re-elected, it is certain the interests of the entire state will be served.
